CLOSE WATCH NEEDED

THE answers supplied by Government to a series of questions by the China Mail yesterday contain a welcome assurance on a subject that is causing a good deal of consternation and alarm elsewhere in the world. We refer to radioactive fallout from the current Soviet atomic tests. Our questions were not dictated by a sense of concern or anxiety for Hongkong — we appear to be too far south of the immediate fallout area — but rather by a desire to know about the checks the local government is making as a matter of routine precaution. For no one knows when and where future tests may be held. Reading between the lines of the government replies, it appears that Hongkong is not sufficiently equipped to make reliable and detailed measurements. Government should not hesitate to make up those deficiencies as soon as possible. Radioactivity is one of the disturbing facts of our present day life which while it has to be accepted, also has to be kept under close watch.

TESTS for contamination of milk by an excess of radioactive iodine 131, such as the British Government has undertaken in the past week, are one need. Equally important is the testing of vegetables and fruit imported from areas where fallout is heavier—today's headlines make that abundantly clear. In making this request we are not suggesting the need for a costly and highly staffed unit to be set up. It seems to be a job which the Weather Bureau on the one hand and the Department of Health, and possibly the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries, could undertake without much difficulty as part of their routine work. Hongkong must not lag behind the rest of the world in these precautions — particularly as we live in a community where medical fairy tales take root easily and flourish sometimes alarmingly.

Hongkong films and stars at festival

New Delhi, Oct. 27. A seven-day international film festival opened here today, attended by film personalities from several Asian countries including Hongkong.

The festival, the second to be held in India since independence, was formally inaugurated by the acting President Dr Sarvapalli Radhakrishnan.

34 COUNTRIES
Films from 34 countries including Japan, the Soviet Union, Argentina, Britain, the United States, Hongkong, United Arab Republic and the People's Republic of China will be screened at selected local cinema halls during the festival.

Leading film personalities from Hongkong, Japan, the Soviet Union, North Vietnam, Argentina and India were present at today's opening ceremony.

They included the actresses Miss Yumi Shirakawa of Japan, Miss Shih Yen of Hongkong and Nguyen Thi Thuang of North Vietnam.—Reuter.

Berlin crisis takes a serious turn

Berlin, Oct. 27.

Soviet and American tanks faced each other across the Berlin sector border tonight and the whole American command in Berlin was put on alert status for 2 1/4 hours. The alert was the second in three days.

Seventy yards separated the two tank forces after the Russians and Americans had played cat and mouse for hours on the border area.

The Communists switched on a battery of powerful searchlights, but when one of the American tanks retaliated the lights on the Eastern side were switched off and the dramatic scene fell into darkness.

Test run
American M-48 tanks first moved up to the Friedrichstrasse crossing point as the Americans again asserted their right of unrestricted entry to East Berlin.

A car carrying two men in civilian clothes made a test run into and out of East Berlin, escorted by three jeeps of armed military police. The American tanks withdrew, and five minutes later Soviet tanks drew up on the East Berlin side of the border. They, in turn, drew back after 25 minutes—five minutes before the American tanks came roaring up again. Then the Russian tanks returned. At one stage 1,000 West Berliners near the border whistled and jeered when a Soviet army bus, full of Russian soldiers in uniform, drove slowly through the American tanks into West Berlin.

Clay's comment
General Lucius Clay, President Kennedy's personal representative in West Berlin, issued a brief statement saying: "The fiction of an East German stoppage is now destroyed." It said the fact that Soviet tanks were on the scene proved that the "harassments" which were taking place at Friedrichstrasse were not those of the "self-styled East German Government" but ordered by its Soviet masters. (In Moscow, Mr Llewellyn Thompson, the U.S. Ambassador, spent 40 minutes with Mr Andrei Gromyko, Soviet Foreign Minister, to lodge a protest against East Germany's actions in demanding that Americans in civilian clothes should show passes at East Berlin checkpoints. (Mr Gromyko, in effect, rejected the American protest by lodging a Soviet counter protest. It was indicated that Mr

IMPRESSION GIVEN BY MR KRUSCHEV'S SPEECH

Chinese to mediate in Soviet-Albanian rift?

London, Oct. 27.

Mr Nikita Khrushchev appears to have accepted Communist Chinese mediation in the dispute between the Soviet and the Albanian Communist parties over allegations that the Albanians still pursue a Stalinist "cult of personality."

This was the first impression among diplomatic observers here tonight aroused by Mr Khrushchev's speech to the Soviet Communist Party Congress in Moscow today.

If that is true, then it was thought that an immediate rift between the Soviet and Chinese Communist parties looked unlikely.

Soviet sources here have suggested that the two Communist parties are in for a long period of uneasy relations which will not however lead to an open rift in the two countries alliance against the Western world.

Mr Khrushchev told the Moscow Congress: "We share the anxiety of our Chinese friends. We value their concern to strengthen unity."—Reuter.

Speculated
On the other hand, observers speculated whether Peking's fear of radioactive fallout from Soviet nuclear tests would aggravate relations with Moscow.

Unlike China, the Soviet Union has not broadcast announcements to its population to take measures against fallout.

Mr Khrushchev in his first public reference to Russia's policy differences with China urged today that the Chinese should help to "normalise relations" between the Albanians and the other Communist parties.

Labour prepares
London, Oct. 27. Labour leaders, with the next general election in mind, have decided to set up a campaign committee to plan and supervise their activities for the next two years.—China Mail Special.

But the big test is yet to come
Berlin, Oct. 27. American and Russian tanks are expected to continue to face each other, gun-to-gun for several days to come.

A major test may still be in the offing. This will come if the U.S. government attempts to use force again to escort U.S. civilians into Communist territory.

DESIGNED
It was three such thrusts in the last three days which precipitated the dangerous situation at Berlin's Friedrichstrasse.

These tests have been designed to prove that the Russians—not the Communist East Germans—have responsibility for East Berlin.

On Friday night, even though the Russian and American tanks faced each other perilously, the U.S. Army sent military vehicles into East Berlin past the Soviet tanks. The Russians made no attempt to stop them.

These vehicles, however, contained Americans in uniform. The Russians recognise their right to move back and forth. But the question is whether the Soviet would stop army cars containing civilians. No test as yet has been made of this in the few hours since the tanks assumed their perilous posture.

In recent months, there has been mounting fear that the Communists planned to interfere with Western road, rail and air access routes to West Berlin.

The East Germans and the Russians have threatened that they will ultimately exercise controls over these routes.

RESIST
American decision to resist in Berlin itself, rather than on the approaches to the city shows the Communists two things.

• Western determination to contest with force on land and in the air any such interference, and

• Western insistence that it is the Russians—not their puppet East German satellite regime—which must bear the responsibility for such interference.—AP.

RUSSIANS EXPLODE ANOTHER

Washington, Oct. 27. Russia set off another nuclear blast at its Arctic testing station today, the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission announced. It was the 25th announced by the Commission since the Russians resumed testing on September 1. Others are reported to have been detected but not announced.

The newest explosion, in the Novaya Zemlya Arctic testing area, was "in the low to intermediate yield range," the AEC said.—AP.

BELLY-DANCES HER WAY OUT OF A CHARGE

Montreal, Oct. 27.

Egyptian nightclub dancer, Fawzia Hanko today belly-danced her way into the good opinion of a judge and out of a charge of giving an indecent performance.

The shapely, 31-year-old Egyptian gave the first scheduled performance of belly dancing ever in a Montreal court and, after a scientific appraisal, Judge Gerald M. Almond dismissed the charge against her.

Her lawyer arranged the performance "just to let Your Lordship see for yourself" whether his client was giving an indecent performance at the Sahara Nightclub.

"That's all right with me," Judge Almond said, "but I don't think it will be necessary for her to appear in costume." She didn't. Fawzia appeared in a skin-tight dress and, with three members of her usual six-man orchestra accompanying her, performed the dance the police had objected to.—AP.

FILMS CURRENT & COMING

by ANTHONY FULLER

THE BIG FISHERMAN (Queen's & Royal) This is a huge Biblical melodrama, shot in Panavision and Technicolor, owing some inspiration to Lloyd C. Douglas's novel of the same name.

Among the scenes the Bible has led us to expect, is the conversion of St Peter to Christianity. On the other hand, a scene omitted from sacred script is the Arabian romance concerning Herod Antipas's first wife, a thoroughly respectable woman, but given to severe fits of depression. She dwells in luxurious chiton tent so much in vogue among the desert nomads, and living with her is Susan Kohner, a neglected daughter of Herod.

Well, when Susan is given the facts of life concerning her dad, she cuts off her hair, disguises herself as a boy, and sets off after dad with no less a motif than to make him see reason from the wrong end of a dagger.

Of course, she meets up with some of the disciples on the way, and consequently the original reason for her journey is forgotten. The language of the film is a quaint mixture of early Stuart English and contemporary American. For instance, Peter to John, who has been listening to the Sermon on the Mount: "You've been acting funny for three weeks."

But the crack I liked best was that made by Martha Hyer (Herodias) to Herbert Lom (Herod) when the latter is anxious to ask a girl to dinner. "We're overwomaned already."

While no one actually says, "Now looker har partner," you kind of sit in suspense for fear that such words might be attributed to some whom tradition has led us to expect a different kind of speech.

There is no offence at the introduction of the Divine. The Sermon on the Mount is given voice off stage, and the hand disappearing into the sleeve of the gown (now a cinema cliché) suggests the person of the Christ. The photography cannot be faulted. It is simply stupendous, overwhelming in fact.

Howard Keel handles the role of Simon Peter, fairly convincingly. I might suggest, Susan Kohner always looks nice as Fara, the daughter of Herod already mentioned; John Saxon is adequate as Volod, who loves her.

Martha Hyer, Herbert Lom, and Ray Stricklyn stand out from the crowd as Herodias, Herod, and Doran. The film includes miracles performed by the Christ; mortal conflict, a terrible hurricane, bitter enmity between Jews and Arabs, and a luxurious and decadent carry-on in Herod's palace. The film is a spectacle, and is best treated and reviewed in that spirit.

WARLORD OF CRETE (King's & Broadway) Now the "Guns of Navarone" are quiet, the King's and Broadway have at last changed their film, but not their location.

For we are still among those golden islands rich in history and steeped in blood. In short, we are in Crete, thousands of years ago, when a Minotaur whose first name was Asterius, demanded strange tribute of Athens. It happened so long ago that there is a fog of scandal about the whole affair even to this day. For instance, some say this Minotaur was the result of a union between Pasiphae and a white bull, and others say that Theseus killed this bull and dragged it about Athens.

At any rate, where we come in is at the point when Minos, the King of Crete demands his nine-yearly sacrifice of seven youths and seven maidens of Athens.

Obviously, these young people have no wish at all to be released in the Cretan Labyrinth to be eaten by the Minotaur, so Theseus, a bit of a show-off undertakes to slay the monster. As the legend were not confusing enough, the producers have added a little contemporary business, have substituted a bevy of strip-tease girls for dolphins, and Amphitrite seemed a little too human, to me, for a sea-goddess.

Not is it quite clear about the Adriatic's sister, Phaedra, but Adriatic I know, and the film has the sequence of the unwinding thread leading into the Labyrinth, but in legend, Adriatic did not go in. However, contemporary myth making to make an extravagant film of scenic splendour and amazing spectacle. The war scenes are out of this world, while the architecture and magnificence of the sets are a scenic delight. Martha Schellings plays the fabulous Adriatic, and fiction gives them a happy ending denied them by myth.

Howard Keel as Simon Peter in the "Big Fisherman" & Royal. (Walt Disney) playing at the Queen's

Bob Mathias, former Olympic champion stakes his right to an ancient legend, by being a modern Olympic victor. My mind's eye did not see either of them as members of the ancient Grecian hierarchy, but who are we mortals to question the folly of the gods? Another thing is, my ear revolts (hear me Father Zeus!) against hearing a Greek God pronounce in the tones of Texas. However, here is optical delight for the hot polloi.

SCHOOL FOR SCOUNDRELS (Lee & Princess) This is a special film for a special audience. Not that everyone will not be able to enjoy the fun, but that twice as much fun is to be had if you are acquainted with the works of Stephen Potter.

For this psychological comedy is adapted from Stephen Potter's "Gamesmanship" saga. It tells how an amiable nitwit cures his inferiority complex under the tuition of Mr Potter, and learns how to win without actually cheating.

The picture assumes that all life is a "rat race" and Ian Carmichael personifies the ordinary chap who puts up with just so much.

Terry Thomas is cast as the amiable villain who will take advantage of his best friend and his best friend's girl, especially his best friend's girl. The audience is given a free Alastair Sim as headmaster Peter.

For example... when giving your best girl a drink, hand it to her in a slippery glass. She will spill the drink over her dress, and if you are a philanthropist, you will help her remove her dress. The rest is silence.

This is definitely a film for the household which reads Punch or lives in the upper-crust suburbs. No one in London needs reminding that Ian Carmichael is an inspired celt, while Terry Thomas's bawled bewilderment as the tide turns against him a thing of joy. Another Hong Kong favourite is Little Jacques in a lovely little sketch, and there is Edward Chapman as the office manager.

If I say the actors show a talent which surpasses that of the script writer, I do not think that I am far out. At any rate, those who like their humour not too obvious, and a laugh with a delayed fuse, this is their picture.

JUDITH AND HOLOFERNES (Roxy & Majestic) is a big screen and colour Italian spectacular. This time the film takes you into Asia Minor at that period of history when the Assyrians were public enemies number one.

History is flowing so fast and thick from the cinema, that I was doubtful about what particular period this represented, especially when I saw the heroine doing a Salome stunt before the main villain of this picture.

What happens is, the Assyrian general is on the make, and is put on the spot by Judith who intends to kill him. Actually she falls in love with him, but patriotism gets in way, and in the end she walks out of the palace with his head tucked underneath her arm. Well, it's all here. Vast crowds, storming armies, great buildings, the mixture as before. Massimo Girotti and Isabelle Corey lead the team.

TOO HOT TO HANDLE (Hoover & Gala) Garish, romantic melodrama, titivated with near-nudity and songs, this is concerned with rivalry between Soho, (London), striptease club owners.

This Eastman Colour epic runs its course until a big hearted momma arrives and puts her hero behind bars for his own good.

The male characters in this picture are scarcely an enduring lot, but they wage their war against the dazzling lights of pimps, poncees, and pukes. The romantic asides do something to break up the rough stuff, and the film moves at a brisk pace.

Jayne Mansfield slings adequately, and makes the most of the fabulous upholstery with which nature has endowed her, in the character of Midnight, a glamorous cabaret star.

Leo Genn pounces on his opportunities as the elegant and ruthless Johnny, while Carl Boehm and Danik Patissou establish a popular heart interest Robert and Lillian.

The murder of Pony Tall, by a wealthy lecher, puts the kids under the strip-club rivalry for a time, and Barbara Windsor strikes a tragic note as Pony Tall.

Christopher Lee deserts the vampires to appear as Novak, a character lower down the social scale than a werewolf. A forty-forty tale, just a little too near the truth to be tossed away scornfully, a sort of two-penny coloured version of the middle sheets of the Sunday newspapers.

This is the way the Radio Cinema, Cairo, presented "The World of Suzie Wong" to the public. This film starring William Holden and Nancy Kwan, was a tremendous success in Cairo.

FRANCE SEEKS PEACE IN ALGERIA—JOXE

The French Government today replied to the peace feelers put out three days ago by the leader of the Algerian insurgent movement, M. Ben Youssouf ben Khedda.

Speaking at a special press conference at Roshier, Algiers, the new seat of government outside the City of Algiers, M. Louis Joxe, the Minister in Charge of Algerian Affairs, said: "We remain faithful to the self-determination of a united Algeria associated with France, and we seek peace, and the concord between all citizens of Algeria which must be the guarantee of peace."

PARTITION

Referring to the position that would arise if no settlement could be reached with the insurgents, M. Joxe said: "Partition or regrouping of populations or emigration can become necessities, but they are not necessarily inating or acceptable solutions. We are not trying to reach such a state of affairs. We have proposed all the means that will enable us to avoid a solution of fear. Sometimes necessity becomes law, but that is not what we are attempting to arrive at."

M. Joxe made it clear that the line of policy laid down by General de Gaulle for the reversion of Algeria would be adhered to by the French Government. M. Joxe held out the prospect of setting up a provisional executive or temporary governing authority in Algeria for what he termed the "transition period," provided "everything happens as it should happen."

This phrase was taken here as an indication that the French Government is not hopeless of getting peace talks with the Algerian insurgents going again soon.—HUPP.

Steel works bricklayers end strike

London, Oct. 27.
A bricklayers strike at the giant steel works at Port Talbot, Wales, the largest in Europe, has been settled. It was announced here tonight.

The strike forced the closing of the huge Steel Company of Wales plant which employs 16,500 men. The strike began two weeks ago when engineers at the Abbey and Margham Steel Works refused to work with "blackleg" labour brought in by the company to replace 850 striking bricklayers. The Steel Company of Wales then closed the vast mills and 16,500 men were thrown out of work.—HUPP.

TELLS OF BORDER RAID Syria accuses UAR envoy in Lebanon of promoting sabotage

Beirut, Oct. 27.
Damascus Radio claimed today that three members of an armed band trying to sneak across the border from Lebanon were killed by a Syrian border patrol. The broadcast charged the United Arab Republic Ambassador here with promoting sabotage against Syria.

The broadcast accused the UAR Ambassador in Beirut, Abdel Hamid Ghaleb of sending out arms for sabotage. Ghaleb, the radio claimed, promoted subversive activities against Syria and was financing saboteurs' with money shipped from Cairo in diplomatic pouches to the UAR Embassy here.

Retreat

No immediate comment from the UAR Embassy was available. The broadcast said the armed band fled back to Lebanon after the clash leaving behind automatic arms and explosives.

The broadcast said Lebanon was innocent of any crimes against the new Syrian Republic and called the two countries brothers.—AP.

Some women stand out, always...

...not for their beauty, though they may be beautiful; not for their clothes, though these are perfection; but for a certain indefinable air, their natural in-born elegance. When next you try to analyse that quiet distinction beyond price, study its elements one by one. Look, for instance, at the watch. You'll find a Rolex watch is the instinctive choice of the world's most elegant women. They appreciate the design and quality that have made Rolex Swiss-crafted watches famous for over half a century. That's why, whenever a gift—for a celebration, or an anniversary, or simply to give pleasure—in your mind, you'll want to give the one watch she would choose herself—a Rolex.

To find out more about the beautiful range of Ladies' Rolex watches, please write for the illustrated Rolex booklet catalogue to Rolex of Geneva or visit your nearest Rolex jeweller.

RIGHT: Sir Oswald Mosley addresses a recent meeting in Trafalgar Square, London, and turns Nelson's Column into an advertisement hoarding for his new book, "Mosley — Right or Wrong."

BELOW: Many models at the London Motor Show come equipped with safety belts. Here is the last word in safety belt fashion — mink covered.

ABOVE: The boat train into Waterloo arrives with 981 West Indian immigrants. But Waterloo may not have many more scenes like this before the Government's decision to check immigrants to Britain from the Commonwealth becomes law.

LEFT: Stan Eldon, international cross-country champion, three mile and six mile AAA-title holder in 1958, is resigning from the police force, after five years service, and gambling on winning a place in the teams for next year's Empire and European Games. Picture shows: It's Police Constable Eldon setting off for night duty—but soon he will be back in civics and working more normal hours.

BELOW RIGHT: Hitching up his sagging blue trunks and clutching his flipper-foet, Lord Hallsham says: "A lovely day for a swim." The 54-year-old Minister, of Science plunged into the icy sea for a 40-minute swim during the Tory Party conference at Brighton.

ABOVE: The rider of the favourite in the Newmarket Town Plate the other day left her nanny to feed her six-month-old baby while she went off to win the race, £50 in prize money, and a magnum of champagne. Picture shows: neat in the saddle, head erect, Susan Piggott, wife of Lester Piggott, gallops Fulminate to victory the other day.

BELOW: Seventeen-year-old Bill Gates has walked out of the sixth form at Spennymoor Grammar School, Co. Durham, into a £50 a week job. He has signed a contract to play football for Middlesbrough for that sum. Picture shows Bill Gates stopping out from school with girl-friend Judith Curry.

ABOVE: C. O'Connor deliberates upon his stroke after his partner, P. Alliss, had overrun the 13th green during their match against D. Ford and G. Littler during the 14th Ryder Cup Match—Royal Lytham & St Annes.

ABOVE: A cheery wave from Viscount Montgomery as he steps off his aircraft at London Airport. He has recently returned to England after a fact finding tour of China, calling off at Canada on the way back.

ABOVE: Rita Hayworth, 42-year-old actress and her 47-year-old actor friend Gary Merrill, out of London and down by the Thames at Shepperton. They flew in to London from Paris the other day; Rita, whose fifth marriage was dissolved last month, "Just to see some friends," Gary Merrill, "Just to wander around." Friends forecast a wedding between Rita (former husbands include the late Aly Khan and Orson Welles) and Gary (ex-husband of Bette Davis).

RIGHT: Over 200,000 people have been immunised against poliomyelitis in Hull, and the remaining 100,000 of the city's population will be dealt with in the emergency clinics. Here is a Hull baby taking the treatment — two drops of Sabin oral vaccine on a lump of sugar.

PRINCESSES AND POETS; THE GRAND PRIX

PRINCESS ALEXANDRA'S ARRIVAL: Friday, 3.55 & 4.25 p.m.—One of the most eagerly awaited public events for years begins on Friday afternoon—the visit to the Colony of Her Royal Highness Princess Alexandra of Kent.

Her aircraft is scheduled to touch down at Hongkong International Airport at 4 pm and Radio Hongkong's commentators Pamela Johnston and Donald Brooks will come on the air five minutes earlier to set the scene and describe the arrival of the Princess.

Listeners will be returned to the studio while Her Royal Highness boards the Governor's launch to cross the harbour; but commentaries begin again at 4.25, covering her arrival at the Queen's Pier, where she will take the salute and inspect an Army Guard of Honour. The scene at the Queen's Pier will be described by Timothy Birch and Victor Price.

Williams an Australian, new to the G. P. who will be sharing the driving of the only Formula Junior Racing Car now left in the race. It is hoped that representatives of the A.C.P. committee will also be present to take part in the discussions.

WIGAN TO ROME: Monday, 8.45 pm.—Bill Naughton, well-known for his very convincing portrayals of men and women from his own county of Lancashire, went on a coach trip to Rome and back. This programme "Wigan to Rome" was the result—the story of the holiday and the way it affected his fellow-passengers, Lancashire people of varying ages, some seasoned coach-travellers, some leaving Britain for the first time. The author's keen observation and wry humour make an amusing and sometimes moving programme out of this mixed bag of characters, their reactions to one another and to the people, places, weather and food of France and Italy. Lancashire men and women tend to be forthright and outspoken, with no nonsense about them and the flat, broad accent helps immensely in these character-sketches.

MAN WITH A GUITAR—Julian Bream's self-portrait, Tuesday 7.30 pm.—Born between Battersea Dogs' Home and the power station, ('they tell me if the wind's in the right direction you can hear Bow bells from Battersea, so I like to think I'm a cockney'), Julian Bream is today Britain's foremost exponent of the guitar and one of its most persuasive advocates, in word as well as deed. In this informal programme Julian Bream traces his own career and demonstrates the remarkable resources of the guitar.

EDMUND BLUNDEN

EDMUND BLUNDEN: THE MAKING OF A POET: Wednesday 9 pm.—Edmund Blunden celebrates his sixty-fifth birthday on November 1st, and to mark the occasion, Radio Hongkong is re-broadcasting the programme Victor Price wrote about the poet's early years, and which was first heard in June of last year. The programme is called "The Making of a Poet" because it follows through Blunden's development until his thirtieth year: his early period in rural England, during which he emerged as a mature poet while still a schoolboy; his shattering war experiences which produced many poems as well as the prose masterpiece "Undertones of War", and the period of recuperation in Oxford and London followed by the early visit to Japan in the 1920's. A large proportion of the programme consists of Edmund Blunden's own account of the formative influences of those early years, recorded in the form of a free conversation in the Radio Hongkong studios, and then dovetailed into the finished programme; and most of the rest is his own writings—poems and prose pieces read by Mavis Bartlett, Derek Hogg and Michel Meredith. Victor Price narrates.

MOTORING MAGAZINE: Wednesday 7.15 pm.—With the Macao Grand Prix less than a month away, Timothy Birch is inviting to the studio for the November edition of Motoring Magazine a selection of drivers, entrants and organisers to discuss the prospects for this year's meeting. Taking part in Wednesday's programme will be John Milner who this year will have more than a pride of Jaguars to look after, Ron Hardwick himself a Grand Prix Winner, George Baker who must now be the favourite for the production car race, and Kerry

A SHERLOCK HOLMES STORY IN FIVE PARTS

This coming week Rediffusion presents, Monday through Friday at 5 o'clock, "The Sign Of Four," a Sherlock Holmes story by Sir Arthur Conan Doyle dramatised as a serial in five parts by Felix Felton.

The Sign Of Four, says Felix Felton, writing in the BBC's Radio Times "has certain elements which make it unique in the Holmes saga." This is a young Holmes—and a young Dr Watson.

Holmes, as the story opens, is in a bad mood, "My mind rebels at stagnation. Give me problems, give me work, give me the most abstruse cryptogram and I am in my own proper atmosphere." In due course, the author supplies the problem, giving mental exaltation to Holmes, and an accelerated pulse-beat to Dr Watson. For in this story Dr Watson (to Holmes' undisguised disapproval) falls in love.

The episodes, in order of presentation are — "The Science Of Fr. T. F. Ryan will present Act 1 of Nicolai's "Merry Wives Of Windsor" tomorrow at 7.30 pm over the Blue Network on "Rediffusion Opera." Fr. Ryan's presentation of these operas are made intelligible to all by the fact that comments are interjected from time to time, in the course of the music, to explain what is happening.

Talent quest

Auditions for the Rediffusion Discoveries amateur talent contest are starting on Sunday.

Mike Ellery, Rediffusion's English Programmes Manager and Producer of the talent quest said today that the response to the station's appeal for "undiscovered" talent had been far in excess of expectations and that several mass-auditions would have to be held. The contest is open to all who can sing, play a musical instrument, whether solo or in groups. "We'll even welcome bird imitators if they can do a good job," Mr Ellery remarked.

Prizes include almost $1,000 in cash, a new TV set, wrist watches, cups, records and cameras. As more contestants are signed up, so will the prizes increase. Contestants must be strictly amateur, not having received payment for their talents. Entry forms are obtainable from Rediffusion House, Gloucester Road, Hongkong, or from Rediffusion's Office in Nathan Road, Kowloon.

Deduction, "The Tragedy Of Pondicherry Lodge," "The Trail Of The Wooden Legged Man," "The Quest And The Kill," and "The Strange Story Of Jonathan Small."

The Spotlight will be turned on Ted Heath and his Orchestra on Friday at 8.45 pm in a programme called "The Instruments Of The Dance Orchestra" presented by Ted Heath. Ted will explain the uses of the various instruments of the dance band with musical illustrations. It is hoped that this programme will create more interest in dance bands and also stimulate ambition in young musicians.

TELEVISION

FEATURE FILM BASED ON A FAMOUS STORY

No one has made a greater contribution to the cinema
'western' than John Ford, and one of his most outstanding productions can be seen in this afternoon's Saturday Matinee feature when John Wayne and Joanne Dru star in "She Wore A Yellow Ribbon."

A new programme from the studios at 7.25 is "In The Kitchen," a series of cookery demonstrations by Ann Lett, well known to television audiences
both here and in Australia.
Ann will be featuring dishes with exotic names that in actual fact are wonderfully easy to prepare, and the first of these is spiced Chicken and Perfumed
Herbs. Another new show at 8.10 with the second of the fortnightly western series, Cheyenne, which stars six-foot six Clint Walker as Cheyenne Brodie in a series that blends two-fisted, six-gun excitement with unusually intriguing story lines.

On the last Sunday of every month there will be a concert given by the Band of the Royal Warwickshire Regiment, and the first of these is on Sunday at 6.35. During its television series, the band will entertain in a variety of ways and will range from concert classics to swing favourites, and from the precision of Martial music to the musical clowning made so popular by Spike Jones.

Mr Perrin and Mr Trail, the screen version of Hugh Walpole's famous story of rivalry between two schoolmasters at a great public school, can be seen in the Sunday film spot at 9.45, with Marius Goring, David
Farrar, and Greta Gynt starring.
How present day scholars have uncovered the origins of much of our rich heritage in religion, and the discovery of articles which substantiate Bible stories will be shown in Thursday's Science In Action. Demonstrations of objects more than 3,000 years old... a jar, a sickle, a plowshare and a grinding stone will be shown, as well as writing tools and the cuneiform, or wedge-shaped characters, used by the Assyrians, Babylonians and Persians.

VISIT OF PRINCESS
ALEXANDRA

The most important event to take place this month is the visit to Hongkong of Princess Alexandra. She will be arriving at Kai Tak on Friday afternoon and Kit Masters will be there to give a commentary on the brief ceremony before she boards the Governor's launch.

John Wallace will be at Queen's Pier to describe the scene and the inspection of the Army Guard of Honour. Further events on Princess Alexandra's itinerary will be covered in Radio Report.

On Sunday afternoon at 4.30
Bernard Miles can be heard in Teatime Theatre telling the first part of the story of Uncle Silas.
First published in 1935, H. E.
Bates' story of the lovable old reprobate has gone from strength to strength in America and the whole of the English reading world. Based on a great uncle of the author, Uncle Silas is a product of Bedfordshire, as is Bernard Miles.

Bernard Miles has had a varied and interesting career embracing school teaching, stage manager and carpenter, actor on stage and television and Vaudeville performer. He is one of the few men who have fulfilled their ambition in the theatre and he now happily runs his own creation, The Mermaid Theatre.

The birthdays of two composers are commemorated in concerts this week. Monday concert celebrates the birth of Peter Warlock with an interesting programme of his music from 10.30—11 pm, and the anniversary of Bellini's birth is remembered in Wednesday's Composer of the Day Concert (2—3).

Opera lovers are reminded that Highlights from Wagner's Mestersingers can be heard at 11.15 on Thursday night. Hans Knappertsbuch is conducting the Soloists and Chorus of the Vienna State Opera and the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra.

Another interesting concert is Monday's Composer of the Day
(2—3) when we can hear
Glazunov's Ballet "The Seasons".
Albert Wiff is conducting L'Orchestre de la Societe des Concerts du Conservatoire de Paris.

This week we say goodbye to Mary Henri who has been with the Station from the early days and in addition to her work on the air has been a tower of strength back stage where she has been responsible for most of the serious music broadcast by the Station. She has also been heard daily on Mary Collins' For the Ladies (3—4) giving succulent-sounding recipes and as a member of the Panel. In addition to her usual programme Bric a Brac (Friday, 9.30 pm) and
When We Were Young (Sunday,
6.30 pm) Mary can be heard after the News Headlines at 9 on Tuesday evening in a short programme for All Hallow's Eve.

One man's word against the mob's...

WHATEVER may be the case with individual violence, mass violence is less common in England than it used to be. It has gradually diminished over the last half-century like the persistent drunkenness from which it largely sprang.

There most now be few areas in any of our cities where rumpus and riot are regular events.

Manners were different back in 1907. Schooling was often vestigial and primitive; the Welfare State was only a notion in Lloyd George's mind; and the resultant huge class of uneducated poor created numerous pockets of endemic tumult.

In London—as indeed in every big provincial centre—there were numerous lanes and alleys where the inhabitants, however much they might rob and fight and beat each other, combined in an active defiance of the law, and where policemen found it prudent to patrol in pairs.

Paddington possessed a high proportion of such plague spots. They seemed to compete for public notoriety, and certainly among the most notorious—it may come as a shock to its present residents—was Cirencester-street, a turning off the Harrow-road.

Its very name had come to strike the same sinister chord that an earlier generation linked with Seven Dials.

August Bank Holiday night that year was exceptionally rough, even by Cirencester-street's undemanding standards. The shindy had been slowly brewing through the afternoon. During the evening, the ferment rose and quickened. The natives abandoned their haunts for the open air, where they rumbled about in disorderly communion.

There were wordy quarrels and physical engagements; there was discordant singing and discordant counter-song; there were attempts to dance by those hard put to it to stand; there was a continuous stream of shrill obscenities.

Uproar

At midnight the uproar in Cirencester-street could be heard easily throughout the neighbourhood.

The police had already looked in once or twice, issued a few cautions, and watchfully withdrawn. They had been greeted—and speedily—with no more than sotto voce grumbles.

But now the situation had assumed a wilder aspect, and the two officers who appeared upon the scene at one o'clock quickly recognised that mere cautions would be ineffective.

Their version of what followed was given in court next morning. They had found Cirencester-street like a mad-house in eruption. Mob-rule reigned—and the rule of an ugly mob at that. To have remained from drastic action would have been a breach of trust, a neglect of that duty police are enlisted to perform.

They had therefore sought out the most conspicuous trouble-raiser and, despite his struggles, taken him into custody.

That, however, did not conclude the incident—far from it—in the sizzling state of Cirencester-street. As the officers were trying to get their prisoner away, amid universal hoots and jeers and occasional showers of gravel, two other men—with the inappropriate names of Church and Sexton—tried with some persistence to effect a rescue.

"No, you don't; he's our pal," they shouted. "Clear off; stand

'No, you don't; he's our pal,' they shouted. 'Clear off; stand back,' cried the harassed police back," cried the harassed police. And when they did not clear off and would not stand back, and intervened by force, inevitably Church and Sexton were arrested, too.

That was what the two officers said—and that was the truth.

Helpless

As Cirencester-street, dressed in its Sunday best, fled through the witness-box at the Old Bailey, those helpless constables must have licked their lips in anguish.

On a counting of heads, of starched collars, of best bibs and tuckers, how could they even hope for the acquittal they deserved?

Indeed they might well have joined that tiny but disquieting club of persons wrongfully condemned in British courts—Adolf Beck, Oscar Slater, Florence Maybrick and Edith Thompson are its most prominent members and exemplars—but for one witness they could call on their behalf who had three credentials, whereas others at most had two. He was unimpeachably respectable. He had been present at the arrest. And he did not live anywhere near Cirencester-street.

This witness confirmed the police account up to the hilt, and added that in his unsolicited opinion, the officers were fortunate to come through with their lives.

So justice was finally served in two separate stages.

First, the officers were triumphantly acquitted. Second, Church and Sexton were triumphantly convicted of the same offence, arising out of the same event—and each received a sentence of nine months.

It was a sharp blow to Cirencester-street, and for long enough the nightly brawls lacked their former savour.

charged together with obstruction.

Both stoutly denied having been present at the apprehension of the trouble-raiser in Cirencester-street.

This was strong stuff, and beyond the usual scope of such defences. It suggested not merely mistake or exaggeration or omission, but deliberate fabrication and creative falsehood.

In effect, it accused the officers of inventing misconduct by others in order to cover misconduct by themselves.

'Fix 'em'

As an unsupported riposte by Church and Sexton, this grave imputation might have been dismissed with scorn. But, confronted by the common enemy, Cirencester-street closed its ranks and rallied round.

Two of ours, eh, mate? Bleedin' coppers got 'em, eh, mate? Fix the bastards, eh, mate? Right, mate. Right.

What was Authority to make of all that evidence—the evidence of Cirencester-street deployed en masse?

The men (and women) who had seen the officers enter Church's house; the men (and women) who had seen them come out dragging Church; the men (and women) who could swear Church did not obstruct the police; the men (and women) who could swear that Sexton was not there at all. Each giving an address in Cirencester-street, or thereabouts. Ought everyone of them to be wholly disbelieved?

Authorily pondered—and then somebody acted. The two officers—while Cirencester-street was not yet organised, they had secured summary convictions against Church and Sexton—now suddenly found the tables turned. Church and Sexton—and their loyal band of allies—were the accusers; the officers were defendants on a charge of perjury.

A CORRESPONDENT deplores the obsession of Dr Strabismus (Whom God Preserves) of Utrecht with moon rockets, and remarks that he used to invent useful things for ordinary people. He still does this.

Among his recent inventions are a hat with sleeves, which is put on like a shirt, an opaque glass tube to be used as a bootlace container, a broad egg-cup for poached eggs, a china mulberry to lure silk-worms, and a bottle with a neck at both ends. He is at present working on a gauze net to keep flies off cows' tails, and an electric necktie that will do sixty knots an hour.

A reasonable compromise
A PSYCHIATRIST who, strained by overwork, thought he was being followed about by a Tasmanian hunchback with a wheelbarrow full of bagpipes, went to a fellow-practitioner. He, too, was suffering from strain, and he told the patient angrily that what had followed him into the room was a pelican ridden by an Arab stevedore. They got into a violent argument, until a compromise was struck. They agreed that what they both saw in the doorway an Arab hunchback pushing a wheelbarrow with a pelican in it.

The penalty of fame
DAWN KEDGAREE and Trivia Tansy, emerging from a film studio, were set on by a crowd howling for their autographs. Said Dawn, "We shall have to learn to write, if only in self-defence."

TURNING POINT

WHAT decides the course of one's life? Life can be plotted calmly, and calculatedly, with an ambitious goal firmly in mind—or it can be changed irrevocably by absolute chance. Four prominent people were asked to trace the turning point in their lives. Mme. Leon Volterra, widow of the wealthy Parisian theatre magnate and racehorse owner (but simply Suzy to the racing crowds), answers questions put to her by JOHN CRUESEMANN. And tells how her husband's death affected her life—and its pattern.

Even at 16, racing excited me

by
SUZY VOLTERRA

I LIKE a full life. I enjoy the challenge of the unexpected. And I love my business. When my husband died 12 years ago he had recorded in his will the wish that I should keep up the stable and continue with the stud farm, as he had planned to do. That wish of his gave me great encouragement. But I had the intention to do so anyway as a tribute to him.

But the beginning was hard. I knew nothing about the actual business of racing, absolutely nothing. I have learned by experience. And I still have a lot to learn, but I am not afraid of finding things out.

I can well remember the first time I ever went to the races. My uncle took me to Auteuil. I was 16 at the time.

There was jumping, which I don't like. I prefer Flat racing. But I realised even then how the atmosphere of racing moved and excited me.

My own beginnings had, of course, nothing to do with racing. At the age of 11 I was still very thin and our family doctor advised my mother to train me as a dancer, because that would develop me best. So I was sent to the Theatre National de l'Opera, where I learned classical dancing at the ballet school. However, I must admit it: I was never stage-struck. I did not have the divine spark, although I managed to pass all my examinations.

Health

Yet I owe a great deal to those years, for they gave me the superb health and ease which I have ever since enjoyed. When I first met my husband he suggested that I take a year's holiday from dancing; but I knew I would never go back. I gave it up.

My best friend in my early days was a girl called Leone.

After a matinee we were passing a cafe-bar near the Opera, much frequented by trainers, jockeys, and even sometimes by owners, and I remarked to Leone: "I would so like to know about all this racing for it draws me somehow."

"I believe that one day I will own a big stable," I was 16 at that time, and I soon forgot the remark. But when later on my life turned out as it did, Leone recalled that saying. It is quite true.

You see, I have premonitions and I follow them. For instance in 1955, two weeks before the Derby, I received an offer to sell half my interest in Phil Drake. I had a feeling the horse would win; I had a good trainer and a good jockey. And twice my husband had sold or partly sold his interest in a horse that a few weeks later won the Derby.

I determined not to miss a third time. I raced Phil Drake under my late husband's colours (although by then I had my own) as a souvenir of him. And Phil Drake won.

Then again just before the Grand Prix de Paris I received another offer from an American, a very good one. I tore the cable up. And Phil Drake won again.

Of course, I am superstitious, but I don't allow this to dominate my life. I was born a Parisienne. But my grandfather was Hungarian and my grandmother Polish. Possibly this Slav blood accounts partly for my zest in life. Certainly it explains my love of Russian food and music.

Capital

My capital is in my horses. If I were to have several bad racing seasons in succession I am not sure if I could carry on. I leave just enough for me to live in reasonable comfort but not in ostentatious luxury, which would only embarrass me.

In fact, if I were as rich as is sometimes reported I would hate it. There would be no risks, no fun in life. The great thing is to have a goal and follow it through to the end, so I hope to continue for a long time to be protected by my husband.

His death appalled me; the truth about his illness had been hidden from me. So great was my love of life and for him that even though he had had to keep to our flat for many months, the mere idea of his not being there never occurred to me.

He was gay and easy, young for his age. Despite the 28 years gap between us life seemed perfect. He gave me immense confidence. And he could be a marvellous mixture of husband, friend, and father, for my real father had died before I was born.

Sadness

I hold that a wife should follow her husband in all things. I remember, for instance, one afternoon when my mother, to whom I owe a lot, had come for tea in our Paris apartment my husband suddenly arrived and announced: "We are off to Scotland." "What, now?" I asked. Yes, at once, he answered as if it were the most natural thing in the world. And within half an hour we left.

"Comfort, yes... but ostentatious luxury would embarrass me"

Then again my husband had a superstition about the colour green. This was sad for me because, as my friends like to point out, I have cat's eyes, so green suits me. But much was my husband's feeling that he would never allow the colour, not even in the stage scenery of his theatres.

One day when we set off for the races he spotted some green rather in my hat. "Take it off at once," he cried in dismay. "It could bring bad luck." So I took the hat off... but the horse lost the race all the same. Besides racing I enjoy the easy, casual pleasures of life—like fishing, for example, which gives me a feeling of peace. And sailing too—that I love. I hate solitude though. But I try to be alone when I want to be, that is when I feel depressed.

Luck

Then I think you need to be on your own. It's like this for me when I have had a bad spell at the races. After all, you cannot win all the time, however lucky you may be. Then when I suffer disappointment I go home quietly and make myself my favourite drink which happens, quite truly, to be English tea—several cups, very strong.

Then I repose myself by watching television or better still playing gramophone records of my three great favourites. Bing Crosby, Jean Sablon, and Maurice Chevalier, the last two being friends of mine.

And maybe I look at the photo Maurice has sent to me or which he has written: "For Suzy, who has carried on with success the fine enterprise started by her husband with such courage. From her friend, Maurice." And I think: That is real encouragement, because it comes from a man I admire. And after that I am ready to go out again. There is a good dinner, possibly, with good friends. I forget about the worries. And I think of the next race.

JEAN CAMPBELL'S NEW YORK NEWSLETTER

New York.
NEW YORK'S new sunshine girl has, unlike that sad little song, no teardrops in her eyes. She is blonde, beautiful and bright. What's more, she is British.

Susan is her name and she is married to Michael Wilding, who is starring on Broadway in the comedy Mary, Mary.

When I went to visit Susan she was dressed in scarlet and gold and on her head she wore a scarlet scarf. "I have just been to a funeral," she explained. And never have I seen a more sensible post-funeral outfit.

It embodied the spirit of that age-old cry "The King is Dead! Long Live the King!"

So does Susan. Wilding is her fourth husband but she has loved them all. Like so many intelligent and financially independent women I have talked to lately, she does not really believe in marriage or in divorce, and dismisses her past as "happennance, happenstance."

BUSINESSWOMAN
Susan is an astute businesswoman. In London she is well known for the flats and houses she buys, renovates and decorates for renting purposes. But she cannot continue this business here unless she takes up citizenship papers which would mean clearing her English assets.

But Susan is busy. She has been taught to swim since she arrived in New York some six weeks ago and now she plans to attend acting classes. She does not intend to become an actress. "I gave that up when I was a girl—some 20 years ago—when my director tried to kiss me," she said with a laugh.

MR SAM

THIS is a bad week for the Democrats, for their beloved "Mister Sam" lies gravely ill in a Dallas nursing home.

Mrs Wilding's past —she coins a new word for it

—First swimming lessons, now acting classes.

President Kennedy flew to his bedside and the nation has been given minute-to-minute reports on his progress.

Sam Rayburn is a tough, rough, burly man of the old American. He makes you feel that a lot like the back room of a bar in a Western movie. But instead of the poker game and the Can-Can girls, a non-stop band plays for too many people in too little space.

Sam held the Speakership of the House of Representatives longer than any other man in history. The job is known as the second most powerful in the United States.

He is no Liberal, coming from the South, and he wept publicly when Lyndon Johnson, his great friend, lost the nomination to Jack Kennedy.

"Mr Sam" was long known as Washington's most eligible bachelor, although he married in his youth for a period of just under a year. His favourite saying used to echo through the halls and committee rooms of the capital. It was brief: "If you want to go along—get along."

THE TWIST

THEY say here that there are two kinds of dogs, those that make you lose weight and those that make you lose your temper.

I came back to New York after a three-week holiday in England to find my best friend a lot like the back room of a bar in a Western movie. She explained that her diet was new, fun and thorough.

It's called The Peppermint Lounge. All you do to get thin quickly is to haunt the Peppermint Lounge and dance the Twist.

Directions for the Twist are simple—stand in one place and make the kind of movements you would ordinarily make if you were trying to dry your back with a face towel after a Christmas dip in the Serpentine.

The Peppermint Lounge is small and dark. It is situated deep on the West Side. It looks a lot like the back room of a bar in a Western movie. But instead of the poker game and the Can-Can girls, a non-stop band plays for too many people in too little space.

Most of the young girls and boys dress in tight trousers and either dance together, or more often... alone.

The visiting English love the place and join in the Twist with that wonderful abandon our people show once they have crossed a sea. English visitors in the last few days have been the Duke and Duchess of Bedford, George Weidenfeld, the Duchess of Buccleuch, Sir Cedric Hardwicke and Mr Henry Cubitt.

CHEERFUL

I HAVE just seen Krishna Menon, who is here as the chief of the Indian delegation to the United Nations.

He was operated on recently for a blood clot, but today his diamond-sharp mind is as clear as ever, in spite of three large holes that were bored in his head during the operation.

Ambassador Menon chose a Jewish hospital in the Bronx for his operation. It is famed for the work of its brain specialists.

Menon is full of cheer and his room is filled with flowers. He talked to me about his journey to Frederickton to receive an honorary degree from the University of New Brunswick.

He covets degrees with the same avidity that some men covet riches. This is the first he has received on the Western side of the Atlantic.

BACHELOR GAY

JOURNEYING to London next week is a most remarkable young man known hereabouts as "The Dormouse" because he is a miser of sleep.

His name is Norman Hickman and, at 31, he is known as one of the most successful independent Wall Street brokers.

"The Dormouse" is coming to London for the wedding of his ward, Caroline Knott, to Prince Ver Windesgracht.

The last time I saw "The Dormouse" in London he was also at a wedding—he was usher at Piers Dixon's marriage to Duncan Sandys's daughter.

But "The Dormouse" is rather like that girl we have all heard about "always a bridesmaid and never a bride."

He is the most popular young bachelor in New York society, for he entertains lavishly in the European fashion. No cokes and hamburgers on the rumpled room floor for Mr Hickman.

He has a vast apartment overlooking the East River with three resident servants and a drawing-room of white and gold. The chairs are covered in tiger skins and the walls are as soft as sin.

By FRANK FISCHBECK

It was nine years ago that she was just a plain, little pig-tailed schoolgirl in a Kowloon convent.

Later she went to an English finishing school, studied ballet in Covent Garden, and returned home on holiday to land a film contract—and earn subsequent fame for her cheeky and down-to-earth portrayal of a waterside bar prostitute.

Now, at 22, Nancy Kwan has moved from the World of Suzie Wong into the World of Hollywood where she lives and talks with the elite of the film industry, and numbers among her friends Elizabeth Taylor, Lawrence Harvey, Audrey Hepburn, William Holden. And she sits between New York, London, Paris and Rome.

This is the kind of life that girls dream about. But is Hollywood—and the life that goes with it—so glamorous? How much does it change a person's character? How, indeed, has it influenced Nancy Kwan?

'Autograph? Sure'

Free from film work, she is at present back home with her family at their big white mansion

By Peter Wilson

While waiting in the grey pastel-shaded lounge, I admired a V-shaped line of pictures on the wall, showing portraits of Nancy and her brothers and sisters. Opposite, colourful little trinkets decorated a recess shelf.

Toy doll

It was a restful atmosphere with a soft, warm breeze blowing in through the half-open French windows.

After a few minutes, Nancy Kwan came jogging down the stairs and into the room, switching her head and dark, penetrating eyes at me like a toy doll unwinding itself.

Dressed in tight blue slacks and a white loose blouse, she kicked off her blue and white slippers and came to rest, with legs crossed, on a settee.

"Tell me about Hollywood," I said.

She ordered the amah to bring in glasses of iced Coca Cola.

"Pardon, what you say?" "I asked about Hollywood."

"It is the place that has the most good-looking people in the world—and some very talented ones, too," she said.

Ambitious

"But what about the life? I imagine there to be an artificial form of living in Hollywood."

"I guess so," she replied guardedly. "I suppose there are good and bad ones among them just like there are anywhere. Perhaps a lot of people are artificial there, but actors and actresses are very ambitious."

"Certain actors and actresses do tend to stick in their own circles, but I have met some wonderful people. After all, what is all this about Hollywood—they're only human like you or I, aren't they?" she said, raising her voice and throwing up her arms as she got up.

"I have a lot of friends in Hollywood, New York, London—all over the place. I am a very good friend of Bill Holden and John Patrick (the script writer of 'The World of Suzie Wong')."

"Bill is very experienced; down to earth, and not like an actor. I met some hunters of his safari club in Kenya. That's a place where I wouldn't mind going. Bill says it's very hot there now. He should be coming to his house in Hongkong in January."

Complex

"It was John who decided to put the phrase 'For goodness sake' in the Suzie film because I used to say it a lot. After the film I gave it up because it gave me a complex."

"I met Elizabeth Taylor when I came through Rome on my way home. She loves parties and I went to one she gave for the Russian Ballet troupe in Hollywood. She and Eddie Fisher are two wonderful people. Eddie's just made a record, you know.

"A real nice guy is Jeff Gorey, my drama coach in California. I still have speech lessons. I'm not so good—I can't read very fast. And one thing I had to do on joining the school two years ago was change my accent because I spoke very English."

In New York, Nancy Kwan shares a medium-sized house with a girl dancer friend who appeared with her in the Suzie and "Flower Drum Song" productions.

Clothes

They go swimming a lot. When relaxing and doing film work, Nancy likes to wear plain clothes, usually slacks. Her favourite is a skirt and sweater. She adores French shoes, preferably medium heeled. And occasionally wears a cheongsam for an evening party.

Apart from a little eye-lash colouring, she doesn't wear make-up.

The simple Oriental clothing tastes remain as much a part of Nancy Kwan as her freckles. But since being lifted into the world of stardom, she has inherited many American ways of life.

She is impatient, jumpy, on guard, and very vain. While waiting or answering a question, she twiddled with her long hair, pressed her hand flat against her stubby nose, beckoned the dog, smoked a cigarette, or switched files away.

Queen

And she pored over a colour photograph of herself in a yellow cheongsam on the cover of Life like a queen looking at her most precious jewels.

Despite the glamour of American life, Nancy Kwan likes to get away to Europe—and Italy. "The Italians don't worry much about anything. They seem to enjoy today and let tomorrow take care of itself. I think that is a great way of life."

"Americans are too fast. They die of heart attacks from worrying." She doesn't like London because of the "weather and food."

Nancy Kwan is very straight and abrupt in her replies. "To the question whether she had had any proposals of marriage, it was a firm head shake with the word, "Nope."

But she did expand for the future by saying that her man must be "intelligent and able to provide me with a comfortable living as this is what I have been used to. I am lazy, so I would like a nice easy life."

Personal questions are a rather touchy subject with Nancy Kwan. Already she hates movie magazines. "If seen in town with a boy then they take it that you are going to get married. That's why I never talk about my private life."

Seeing me out, she said: "I must wash my hair tonight. You caught me on the wrong day."

"How many times do you wash your hair," I asked.

"Once a week," she said. Then she flashed a saucy look and proclaimed with indignation: "The next thing you'll want to know is when I take a bath, and what soap I use."

The World of Nancy Kwan has certainly changed. But, like Suzie, she still has that same cheeky humour.

A winter silhouette

The three present fashion silhouettes—straight, high fit and flare—all offer great possibilities for maternity wardrobes.

The princess dress, gently fitted right beneath the bust, is perfect for the early months. Recommended in black, wool or crepe, with flare starting just above the hip.

For the middle months, the overblouse, dropping with loose straightness to thigh-top, looks gay in turquoise or green, with matching skirt swirling with pleats.

For final months, the tunic is suggested, with undrained waist, flared hemline, and cross-over effect on one side. Beneath fitted right beneath the bust, is goes a just-visible slim skirt.

For wear-with-everything, a topper in print corduroy, flaring out at the back from a yoke, slightly straighter in front, with full sleeves.

Other good items for a winter maternity wardrobe are loose, bulky sweaters, flaring tops, and the mummy in all lengths, colours and prints. In dateless, comfortable easy-to wear casuals that

IT'S THE SMARTEST

OF THEM ALL

BULLY for the British. For years we have suffered from a fashion inferiority complex. The Continent cornered the market in snob value and I don't mean just the golden girls who dress from the haute couture.

You boasted about the little French hat you picked up in the Galleries, gloated over your Italian bag and shoes simply because they were Italian, or felt complacent and cosmopolitan in a length of Swedish cotton.

English women have been cutting the roses in for years.

THEY WEAR our kilts—but not in a way you'd recognise north of the border. In Paris the kilt skirts the knees—school-girl short—is made in tartans glaring enough to turn Rob Roy in his grave, and is worn with dark sheer stockings, little patent pumps, and king-sized kilt pins.

Jewellery

THEY GRAB our sweaters—smartest Paris fashion word, "Le Chetland"—smartest American way with them, with more junk jewellery than sweater showing.

THEY ADORE our flannels—dark charcoal grey climbed its way classily through all the best collections and the girl in the grey flannel suit has ousted the man in the grey flannel suit throughout New York.

THEY LIVE in our plain white belted raincoats.

THEY BUY—goodness, how they buy! The Fashion House Group of London alone exported £800,000 of cloths last year, and over 400 foreign buyers are expected at their show next month.

A prophet, it seems, is not without honour save in his own country.

Casuals

Fine—foreign—fashion is fun, feminine and inspiring and I am not decrying it one bit. But if you really want to be on today's wavelength, tune in over the Channel or train a Transatlantic telescope on the young girls of America.

The French girl calls her new craze "Le Style Anglais." The American christens hers "Clas clothes" and what both of them mean are the kind of dateless, comfortable easy-to wear casuals that

PRACTICAL HOMECRAFT

AT HOME

TODAY: LORD ULICK BROWNE

NECESSITY, one assumes, is the mother of invention, although this is not exactly what a derisive Liverpoolian friend of mine meant when he said, "Lundoners, luv? Slap a bit of that contemporary wallpaper up and they'd live in a ruddy coal 'ole."

The fact is "they" do live in the most extraordinary places. I've found them in barges, barns, garages, double-decker buses and park benches.

I found Lord Ulick Browne in a warehouse, not down, out and dishevelled, though the situation is rife with such Pinteresque possibilities, but eddily enough preferring livability to possibility.

And so he has done slightly more than "slap a bit of that contemporary wallpaper up" to convert the place into an excellent modern home. Besides, this warehouse is near Belgrave Square.

Ambition

TALL and haphazardly built, some Lord Ulick Browne is a theatrical agent and has recently taken over the Satriu night club with his partner Paul Adam.

He was formerly a student at the Munich school of art. "I nurtured the ambition to be an architect," he said, "but the war intervened and afterwards I dropped the idea and went into show business."

"I can't say I have any regrets either. I gather from the monstrosities I see going up everywhere that anyone attempting to do good architecture in this country is beset with frustrations and unsurmountable problems."

But despite this paucity in good architecture he still retains his enthusiasm and interest in the subject.

"Six years in the Army conditioned me to be impervious to my surroundings," he said resignedly.

Impervious though he may be to his surroundings, he is currently surrounded by a decor vastly more palatable than the Army barracks that induced him to cultivate this capacity.

The fact that he designed his home in 1938 is itself a tribute to his talents as a designer.

Simplicity

THE living room is 40 by 20ft. The accent is on simplicity with a long white 12ft. settee, low marble-topped tables, and small square black metal stools with brightly coloured cushions. His preference is for texture rather than pattern, and one wall of this room is made of charcoal grey rough plaster which serves as a backdrop for a white metal sculpture by Jutt Dornbach. The colour scheme is white, charcoal grey, bright red and some violet.

"I have no set dogmas about colour," he said, "but I do like something that has dramatic impact.

"Whenever I go to an exhibition of English interior design the place seems permeated with an atmosphere of cautious refinement. It seems to me much more desirable to go out on a limb even if you make mistakes."

Lord Ulick Browne has no paintings in his home. "Not that I am anti-painting," he instinct to explain, "but I think they should be an integral part of the building, not just hung willy-nilly on walls. They should BE walls, or some functional part of the structure."

"For instance, I might have a Jackson Pollock or something similar entirely covering one wall so that it would be like a wallpaper,"—which is a category into which many people would put, if not Pollock himself, certainly the "something similar."

No clutter

TITLES and traditional design are generally indivisible, and somehow both have become inextricably synonymous with what is coyly termed "gracious living"—but which frequently denotes bad plumbing, flock wallpaper and claustrophobic clutter.

So it was with pleasure and considerable relief that I saw

Lord Ulick Browne's home and realised that the responsibility of patronising modern design doesn't lie entirely on the shoulders of the valiant proletariat.

— From China — a lesson in economy

London.

AT last—something for which I have been waiting for a long time—an American who praises British food unreservedly and an Englishman who says that his country-women are marvellous cooks!

Clementine Paddleford, one of the top cookery writers in the United States, who has recently been on a visit to this country, found only praise for our English food (and she can be pretty critical about the cooking in her own country) and an Englishman on one of those radio panel games became positively ecstatic about English women's cooking.

I have always been enthusiastic about the food and cooking in these islands.

There have been springing up at the astonishing rate of something like one every three days. The Chinese are economical; their dishes are extremely tasty and they never make the mistake of overcooking anything, particularly vegetables.

They make use of the so-called "cheaper" cuts of meat and even a boiling fowl arrives at table, in little pieces, as tender as a spring chicken and with much more flavour.

One of the least expensive and most sought-after dishes in Chinese restaurants in this country is Sweet Sour Pork.

First make the sauce itself. Mix together ½ cup malt vinegar, ¼ dessertspoon of soy sauce, a roughly-chopped clove of garlic, 6 level dessertspoons of sugar, ½ cup water and 2 teaspoons cornflour. Heat a dessertspoon of peanut (arachide) oil in a saucepan. Pour the mixture into it and stir over a good heat. It will quickly clear and be ready.

For up to six persons, cut 1lb boneless lean pork—could be shoulder or streaky belly—into ¾ in. squares. Turn the pieces in a mixture of 1 tablespoon soy sauce, 1 rounded tablespoon brown sugar and 1½ tablespoons cornflour. Heat ¼ pint peanut oil in a small frying-pan and fry the pork in it to a warm golden brown.

Pour the strained hot sauce over the pork in a serving dish and, if liked, sprinkle a cup of cooked peas on top.

Green peppers are plentiful just now and they make a very pleasant accompaniment for sweet sour pork. Fry a chopped small onion in two to three tablespoons of peanut oil. After removing the seeds and cores, cut three large fleshy green peppers into strips and then diamonds.

Cook them and two to three sliced mushrooms for a few minutes in the oil, tossing them about as dexterously as you can. Add 2oz. to 3oz. shelled shrimps and toss them about, too.

Finally, add a little soy sauce and a little chicken stock (which can be made from hot water and a chicken cube), blended with half a teaspoonful of cornflour. Sprinkle with a little of the seasoning salt (mono sodium glutamate) and simmer just long enough to cook the cornflour. To this mixture, you can add cooked peas, bamboo shoots and bean sprouts.

FOR RICE THE CHINESE WAY, wash a cupful of Burmese rice, rubbing it between the fingers to remove all traces of starch. Rinse very well. Place it in a bowl with 1½ cups cold water. Stand the bowl in a pan of boiling water, reaching very well up it. Cover and steam for 45 minutes. This produces dry rice, with each grain separate.

Do not worry if there is more rice than needed for your immediate wants, because it can be used for a fried rice dish next day. For 2 cups of the dry cooked rice heat a tablespoon of peanut oil in a pan. Add the rice and stir it for 2 minutes over a hot fire. Stir in a tablespoon of soy sauce and mix well together until the rice is fairly firm again.

EATING OUT

TUCKED away in Malton street, Chelsea, is La Popote, a "little restaurant" which is different from the "ordinary" ones in that, while the usual chops and steaks as well as some provincial dishes appear on the menu, there are also some with a touch of the Chinese. Bill's Sea Food Soup (simple servings) was very pleasant. So was the succeeding dish—Chinese chicken with sweet and sour pineapple sauce accompanied by rice with each grain separate.

After these it was impossible to eat more, I shall go back to this restaurant, but shall do without the coffee which, at 2s., was not all that good. Lovely clean kitchen.

A meal for two, including a sherry each, half a bottle of Pouilly Fuisse (1959) and a cover charge of 1s. 6d. each cost £2 16s. 6d. Carafe wines, 11s. 6d.; wine by the glass, 3s. 6d.

WHERE ARE THEY NOW?

Today, in the fourth of this series, the China Mail presents the man who gave his name to an era

What happened to the man who made the Bentley?

IT is one of the great status symbols of our age. It goes with caviar and champagne, with business-lunch paunches and elegant women.

Its engine note is as dulcet a sound as the gentle rustle of fivers in a crocodile-skin wallet.

It is the Bentley motor-car.

To see one gliding, with supercilious grace, through a crowded street is to catch a glimpse of another world; a world of dinner at Whites, of fat cigars and nightcaps of Napoleon brandy.

To own one is to proclaim to the world that you have arrived at the top.

Extremely happy

But what of the man who gave his name to the car—Walter Owen Bentley? A pretty rich man, you imagine? Far from it.

W.O.—as he is known in the motoring world—is now 73. He is as sprightly and as vigorous as a man 16 years younger.

He and his wife live in a modest bungalow cottage in the village of Shamley Green, a mile or so from Guildford, in the heart of the lush green Surrey countryside.

No more for W.O. the high-powered cars at Le Mans. In their place the gentle swish of his hand mower as it glides across the lawn of his country cottage.

1765 MILES IN 24 HOURS.

BENTLEY'S FEAT.

British cars secured a world's record and the first four places in the twenty-four hour race at Le Mans yesterday.

Left: A newspaper cutting recalls W.O.'s "greatest achievement"—his cars take the first four places in the 1929 Le Mans.

millionaire driver Woolf "Babe" Barnato, who had become the chairman.

The Bentley company was taken over by Rolls-Royce ("I think we had had them worried with our competition") and W.O. went with the purchase. "It was part of the assets," he told me.

But Rolls-Royce didn't seem to regard W.O. as all that much of an asset. For one thing, they already had their own team of designers.

Nevertheless, he was eventually given a well-paid job as technical adviser to the managing director. "It was quite a good job. I did a lot of travelling. It was all very nice, but I wasn't doing what I wanted to do—designing cars."

"In a way you might say that Rolls-Royce put me into cold storage."

Just why they should have chosen to have done this to a man who had already proved his outstanding worth is likely to remain something of a mystery.

W.O. maintains a discreet silence on the subject. "You are treading on difficult ground," he said when I raised it.

"It's all a long way off now. I would rather have it forgotten. I have some very good friends at Rolls-Royce now."

As soon as he was free to do so, W.O. left Rolls and joined the Lagonda firm.

JACOBY on BRIDGE

NORTH'S jump to seven spades over his partner's five no-trump call was a distinct overbid. True, North knew that South was suggesting a grand slam contract, but North had only 13 high card points.

The way the cards lay, South's decision to go to seven no-trump was a life saver. A heart or club opening by East would have knocked the spade grand slam out of the box.

A heart opening would also have beaten South's seven no-trump.

December or June safest for that moon trip

Washington.

Best time to go to the moon is in June or December.

American scientists who have been keeping watch for 11 years reported here today that for some strange reason radioactivity in space drops to its lowest in these periods. Men who set out during "safe months" stand the best chance of returning from the moon unharmed.

The finding is of tremendous importance for designers now at work on the first moonships for it means they should not need to supply thick protective skins as was once believed necessary.

Gas blobs

It is now clear that the sun is entirely to blame for sudden increases in space radiation. When flares occur on its surface, huge blobs of radioactive gas puff into the heavens and form dangerous floating obstacles to manned space flight.

But American and Russian scientists now claim to be able to predict solar flares three to four days in advance, by noting sudden appearance groups of black spots on its face.

So it will be possible on two-day journeys to the moon to give enough warning to astronauts to allow them to turn their spacecraft round to return to earth or beam on quickly to land, say that the moon's bulk shields them from approaching streams of dangerous radioactive sun gas.

(London Express Service).

Woolf "Babe" Barnato (above), the only man to win the Le Mans three years running (1923-29-30), drives his Bentley to victory in 1930.

care? W.O. seemed less concerned about this problem than I was. He smiled and answered: "I suppose the truth is that I was always a better engineer than I was a business man. I was never very good at business. It just didn't seem very important."

The Bentley motor-car was born in this country years after the First World War.

W.O., who had designed a highly successful rotary aero-engine which had powered the famous Camel fighter plane, felt the urge to produce his own car.

Bentley Boys

The first production model—a 3-litre coupe—was sold to a wealthy young socialite for something over £1,000 in September 1921.

Three years later, in 1924, a 6½-litre model brought Bentley cars their first win at Le Mans. The next year were heavy with the ripe fruit of success. The Bentley Boys, a group of Mayfair playboys each with his Bentley, became a living legend. The powerful car gave these rich dilettantes an object in life—speed.

Some of their names went with the name of the Bentley car into the Roll of Honour of world motor racing.

"My greatest moment," recalls W.O., "was in 1929, when Bentley took the first four places at Le Mans."

But by 1931 it was all over. The post-war boom had crashed with the ripe fruit of success. The Bentley Boys, a group of Mayfair playboys each with his Bentley, became a living legend. The powerful car gave these rich dilettantes an object in life—speed.

No longer were the idle young men handed the keys of a £2,000 car on their 21st birthday.

The Bentley company, supported only by wealthy backers instead of public investment, was vulnerable to any decline in the luxury trade.

"Our sales didn't slump—they were just cut. Bang, like that," said W.O.

Looking back I think the company might have been saved. We made the mistake of having all our eggs in the one basket. The company's principal man has been held almost a backer was the dashing young outsider for years."

'Years ahead'

He reflected a moment before adding: "Mind you, a job would make all the difference between comfort, just having what I need, and having a few luxuries—the odd holiday abroad, that kind of thing."

I can tell any prospective employer that W.O.'s interest in design is undiminished. But I should also warn British manufacturers that they may find the views of the greatest name in cars a little unpalatable.

When I called he was studying the design of the new Renault.

"Look at this," he said excitedly. "They are years ahead of us in family car design."

"Bentley firms have been to sell all they want for so long. We made the mistake of having let design lag. The technical principal man has been held almost a backer was the dashing young outsider for years."

17/21 CLUB PHOTOGRAPHIC COMPETITION PRESENTATION TO WINNERS

And a suggestion from the editor

THE winners have been announced, the prizes have been presented, and the 17/21 Club's first photographic competition is over.

But it has been so successful and we received so many entries, it will definitely be held again next year. That means another chance for those who were not so successful this year.

The prizes were presented last Wednesday evening in the South China Morning Post Staff Club by the Editor of the China Mail, Mr R. G. Hutcheon.

Famous

The ceremony was attended by judges of the competition, representatives of the firms who donated the prizes, and members of the staff of the China Mail and South China Morning Post.

In his short address before the presentation Mr Hutcheon said that to anyone who had lived in Hongkong for any length of time, it was not surprising that the quality of the entries and the standard of photography generally should be so high.

"Hongkong cameramen are world famous and I feel that if this is a fair sample of the work of the up and coming generation, Hongkong's good name in the photographic world is assured for some time to come" he said.

Pocket money

Mr Hutcheon suggested that the winners could put their new equipment to work for the China Mail by sending in news pictures of fires, rescues, or anything dramatic or unusual.

"We pay for any pictures that we use, so you may be able to earn a little pocket money for yourselves — and perhaps be able to see your pictures on page one!"

Mr Hutcheon also expressed gratitude to the judges, Mr Ken Watson, Mr Lau Wai-kwong, Mr Tom Chan and Mr Frank Fischbeck, and the donors of the prizes, Gilman's, Kodak (Hongkong) Ltd, Y. C. Woo, Asia Photo Supply Co, and Goddard and Co.

The winners

Then the prizes were presented—Two cameras and a cine camera to S. C. Wong who won first place in the pets and general sections and a third in the portrait section; two cameras to Lau Shing-kwong who came first in the portrait section and third in general.

Thomas Lam who came third in the pets section and was a runner-up in the general and portrait sections won a camera and six rolls of film. An electronic flash and six rolls of film went to Tong Hing-yin who was placed second in the pets sections and was runner-up in the general and portrait sections.

Kaan Sheung-hin who won second place in the general section got a camera, and an electronic flash went to Ng Shui-wai who placed second in the portrait section.

All About Oceans

-General Tin Has Seen Five Of Them-

TEDDY, the Stuffed Bear, went up to his friend Knarf, the Shadow Boy with the Turned-Around Name, and asked:

"What's an ocean?" Knarf, who was trying to tie a shoelace, looked up at Teddy and said:

"Oh," said Knarf. "An ocean. What about it?"

"I've never seen an ocean," said Teddy. "What's it look like?"

"An ocean is a lot of water," answered Knarf. "It's very big. It's tremendous."

"As tremendous as the lake in the park?" asked Teddy.

"It's tremendous," said Knarf.

Teddy was silent for several minutes, trying to imagine in his own mind how tremendous an ocean can be if it was tremendous than the lake in the park.

"I'd like to see an ocean sometime," he finally said. "Did you ever see one, Knarf?" he asked again.

"No," said Knarf. General Tin, the Tin Soldier, was standing guard by the door on the other side of the room, with his musket over his shoulder. He stood there to keep Tigers and Elephants and other wild Animals from coming into the room — which, of course, they never did.

Teddy went up to General Tin and asked him if he had ever seen an ocean. General Tin gave Teddy a look and then he said: "My Boy, I've seen more oceans than you have fingers on one hand."

Teddy held up one of his hands or rather, paws. He carefully counted his fingers or, rather, toes. There were five of them.

General Tin was saying: "I've seen the Atlantic Ocean, the Pacific Ocean, the Indian Ocean, the North Pole Ocean — which some People call the Arctic Ocean — and the South Pole Ocean — which some People call the Antarctic Ocean."

Teddy asked General Tin how the oceans got so tremendous. "Well," said General Tin, "long, long ago, the oceans were just big holes in the ground. Then it started to rain. It rained and it rained and it rained... and still it kept on raining. And, finally, when everybody thought it had rained enough, the rain started falling all over again, and it rained and it rained some more."

Lots of rain!

"That certainly was a lot of rain," said Teddy.

"It filled those holes in the ground right up to the top," said General Tin. "There was so much water you couldn't see from one side to the other."

"Yes," said Teddy, "but what I want to know is what you can do with the ocean?"

"You can sail on it," said General Tin.

From the other side of the room, Knarf called out:

"What's an ocean?" Teddy, the Stuffed Bear, asked Knarf.

"And you can go swimming in it!"

"And you can catch Fish in it," said General Tin.

"Oh," said Teddy. "I didn't know you could do all those things in the ocean."

Could live there

"If you were a Fish," said General Tin, "you could live in an ocean, too."

Teddy went and sat down next to Knarf and they talked about how wonderful it would be if they were Fish and had all five oceans to swim in!

"I think a Fish is like a Bird," said Knarf. "And the ocean is like a tremendous sky. And I bet the Fish talk about North America and South America and Asia and Africa and Europe just the way we talk about the five big waterplaces — I mean the oceans — that they live in."

Rupert and the Secret Path—52

Constable Growler has spotted something that the little pals have missed. "That slab down there," he says urgently, "it's been carefully covered with earth and pebbles." "Well, what about it?" says Rupert in a puzzled voice. "Let's take it up," says the Constable. "Ah, there you are. 'Tisn't stone. It's wood! It's quite light." In the space under the slab is a strong leather case, and seizing it eagerly Constable Growler examines a sheaf of papers inside it. "This is just what I needed!" he exclaims. "We've got him! Now it's proved!"

CARL MYATT'S NOTES ON NOTES

Music store director visits America and finds Top record stars planning

Some of America's top recording stars are beginning to focus their eyes on Southeast Asia, and many of them are planning trips to this area, said Mr Ren da Silva, Managing Director of the Diamond Music Company the other day.

Mr da Silva just returned to the Colony from an extensive business trip to the United States and Japan. He met young artistes like Bobby Vee, Johnny Nash, Paul Anka and Connie Francis, and all of them, without exception, expressed the desire to visit Southeast Asia, particularly Hongkong.

"Paul Anka will definitely be visiting the Colony in the not too distant future, but the exact dates have not been fixed due to his very heavy series of engagements in the U.S.

"I also spoke to Johnny Nash and he seemed most enthusiastic about visiting us.

Unspoilt

"Bobby Vee would come on one condition—he wouldn't have to work in a nightclub, but on stage. I liked Bobby. He was nice and young, friendly and completely unspoilt.

"Then, of course there was Connie Francis. I haven't met anyone quite like this young lady. I'd say she is the hardest working person in the business. She never seems to get tired. She is surely "Miss Perfectionist". She just made a new television series released through ABC and sponsored by the makers of Brylcreem.

The sponsors are currently on a giant sales campaign and are giving away free, a Connie Francis LP that is not on the market, to everyone purchasing a giant sized bottle of their product. Their initial order was for ten million LPs and this in itself is quite fantastic.

A challenge

"Connie is quite prepared to record some of her big hits in Chinese—specially for this market—and she plans to go to the Berlitz School of Languages to learn pronunciation.

And here is a challenge to all Hongkong lyric writers. If any of them feel they can write Chinese lyrics to any of Connie's numbers, they are invited to send them along to me, here at Diamonds, and I will forward it to the responsible authorities in the US.

"Connie too wants to come to Hongkong—and is quite determined to do so when she finds the time. She is so busy at present it isn't funny."

Changes

The last six months have been of great importance in the U.S. music industry, said Mr da Silva. Many changes have taken place, particularly among groups. Dave Guard has left the Kingston Trio, Tony Williams has broken away from the Platters and is now a soloist with the fast growing Reprise label.

"Reprise is growing very fast because of Sinatra's influence and his recording, film and nightclub contacts. He has trips in this direction

revealed his power by the manner which some of the most promising artistes in the business are rallying to his company."

The famous Bud and Travis duo have also split and are now branching out as featured soloists.

During his tour, Mr da Silva discussed many aspects of the record industry with some of the most influential men in the business, and came to the conclusion that the major companies are disturbed by the growing popularity of "single" records and the smaller companies.

Singles

"The minor labels are getting the bulk of the singles trade, and this in a large measure, is the fault of the bigger companies. In order to gain business, they rented out their studios and placed the pressing facilities at the disposal of these small companies in return for a nominal fee. But now things have got out of hand. A monster has been created, and try as they might, the big companies cannot push this genie back into the bottle."

Continuing, Mr da Silva said that rock and roll was still too big, and the flood of instrumental pieces has snowed under a number of very beautiful ballads, mainly because disc jockeys just have too much material to handle.

Teenagers in America are gradually becoming aware of the beauty of ballads but it is the "tenteens" (under 13s) who have become the biggest buyers of singles, and they have pushed the sales of rock and roll and prevented the rise of the ballads.

Pat

"I also ran into Pat Boone while I was there" said Mr da Silva, "and Pat was very cut up about the entire Manila incident." He is very bitter about the whole thing and insists he was utterly misquoted." Pat is alleged to have said some very unkind things about Manila audiences, on his return to the States from his tour.

Mr da Silva, on behalf of Diamonds, closed a deal with Cadence, Chancellor and Canadian-American records to release their discs here. This means that for the first time the works of people like Frankie Avalon, Fabian, Eddie Hodges, Johnny Tillotson the Cordettes and Don Shirley, will be available.

"We also plan to put out a Little LP very soon. This is the latest innovation in the music business. It is a record of 45 rpm size but containing six tunes which can be played at 33-1/3 speed.

"These discs will cost little less than half the price of an LP and will enable the collector to choose his material with greater care," said Mr da Silva.

Hit Parade By Mitch Meredith

The big mystery man in both the 'pop' world and that of jazz has been and still is Ray Charles. Most people argue about Ray. No one is quite certain as to his rightful place in the music world.

Hailed by some as a genius, and finding others indifferent to him yet wondering what all the fuss is about. He has, incidentally, a new hit on the British charts. The name is "Hit The Road Jack" and already it's well on its way to the top. As to be expected, the number is an out-and-out Rhythm and Blues tune.

Perhaps it is because of his style of singing that he approaches jazz. It is instrumental in its phrasing, much like that of many of the great jazz singers (in particular Louis Armstrong).

However, he shows a great interest in modern jazz and has waxed an album with Milt Jackson. I thought I'd mention him this week because it's possible that we'll be hearing some of his music on our hit parade soon. Remember "What'd I say"?

Diary of a freshman by Jennie Wong If only they would smile!

BEARING in mind that I would have a good time, at least for a year or two, in the University, I was greatly disappointed after the first few lectures.

Any secondary student would envy me at a glance of my time-table. Indeed, I have to attend only twelve lectures. I have three afternoons off and no lectures on Saturdays. Even the lectures are not compulsory.

The only "mjsts" are the tutorial classes, of which I have only two in a week for English and nearly once in a month for History.

But, as I have said, I was greatly disappointed, for though it is obvious that lectures are comparatively few, I have to do much of the work on my own. If I grow slack, there is no one to compel me to shake off my laziness. So there is the difficulty of having to push myself to work even though I am quite unwilling.

The first few days as a freshman, attending lectures and doing all sorts of things which become a University student seemed to me the dulllest days in my life. I guess that must be because I had as yet not been able to adjust myself to this kind of life.

"THANK YOU SO MUCH FOR TEACHING ME...
... WHICH FOOT OF YOURS AM I TO STEP
ON NOW?"

Since my friends were not taking the same subjects, I very often felt at a loss when I had a couple of hours between lectures. Sometimes, I felt so lonely that I wished I were still in school, where the schedule was nearly all filled up.

Although I love the new Union Building, I do not love the flight of steps that lead to it. It worries me most on a hot day when I have to climb these interminable flights for a bottle of soft drink. By the time I am back again in the Main Building for a lecture, the magic of the drink has ceased working.

Meeting new faces is one of the great difficulties in my life. I do not know when I can get over this shyness of mine, but I hope it won't be long.

Having spent so many years in a secondary school, I have always taken for granted that a school is like a family. It was a habit for those who recognised each other's faces to exchange greetings when they met.

I did not meet with the same success here. Blessed are those who return the greeting with a cheerful smile. It does so much, you know!

While I could not help feeling more embarrassed when I met the small number who did not care even to give a nod. However, who knows if those who kept to themselves are also brand new freshmen and shy like me?

★ STAMP NEWS ★

33. THE 1900-02 ISSUE

IN 1899 the Postal Union recommended that uniform colours for stamps representing the unit postage for a letter, postcard and printed paper in the international post should be adopted: the colours were blue, red and green respectively.

The PMG requisitioned new printings with the 2c in green, the 4c in red and the 10c in blue; the 5c was required in yellow to distinguish it from the 10c in blue and a 12c (not printed since 1879 though still current) to be in vermilion.

There was compromise in the colour scheme as it contradicted the earlier request for a simplified postage and revenue series in doubly fugitive inks; the latter inks were limited to shades of green and purple, and black. The final colour scheme was:

SG 56	2c	dull green	(plate 2)
57	4c	carmine	(plate 2)
58	5c	yellow	(plate 1)
59	10c	ultramarine	(plate 2)
60	12c	blue	(plate 1)
61	30c	brown	(plate 2)

The first batch of 2c and 10c were despatched from London in May, 1900, and the other values in December, 1900. The 12c and 30c were issued posthumously; they were not placed on sale until February, 1902 and December, 1901 respectively.

A new Caron—down among the beatniks

FORGET her in "Fanny." Forget "Gigi." Forget "Lili." Forget the Leslie Caron you first thought of with her tomboy tumblings. There's a new Caron on the way—and this one is a swinger.

Soon you will see her as part of the American beatnik scene.

This 26-year-old Bohemianism had its beginnings in the wine-bars and art shops of San Francisco's North Beach area and found its chief spokesman in the uneasy novels of Jack Kerouac.

WILFUL

One of them, "The Subterraneans," has been made into a film. It tells how a young writer (George Peppard) becomes at first fascinated, then inextricably involved in the drifting, discursive, drunken night-life of the poets, painters, and musicians who make up the beatniks.

And it is as Mardou—the beautiful, wild, passionate, and free-loving girl he falls for—that Leslie Caron grabs the screen-acting chance of her career.

Her hair lightened, dressed in sweaters, a kimono or less, she browses and boozes her way from "pad" to "pad" until, naturally, reality shatters her self-deception.

Mr Cook—and 5,000 funny bones

WE have just seen the opening of Britain's first—and, I suspect, last—satirical nightclub, "The Establishment."

Master-minded by Peter Cook, the tall, casual iconoclast from Africa centred on the rise and fall of Mr Numbasi and his weekly encounters with the Bahaba tribesmen. He will be assisted by an African waiter who will be held responsible if everything goes wrong.

Fortunately for Mr Cook and his associates, this sort of humour—which washes over that Transatlantic satirist Mort Sahl like condensed milk—has tapped the funny bones of our island individualists. He will do well.

As I stumbled over the half-laid floor towards the street, he shouted after me down the stairs: "...and remember the basement is Bomb-proof—in the event of an Attack that's where the Cabinet has agreed to meet."

I always knew there was a use, somewhere, for "dis-establishmentarianism"—the longest word in the English language.

Mr Wagner chooses freedom

MR ROBERT WAGNER—A star with the rare permutation of tidy features, excellent manners, and uncomplicated charm—is currently rating a triple "ex."

Now 31, he is—by his own admission—an ex-teenage idol; a temporary ex-patriate; and, if the cooing crumbles to form, he will eventually become the ex-husband of Natalie Wood.

In London between engagements—Zanuck's "The Longest Day" and Columbia's "The War Lover"—Mr Wagner devoted some of his leisure time to discussing the joys of breaking loose from a studio contract.

"You know, there were three guys came out of the big studios at the same time," he said. "Tony Curtis, Rock Hudson, and me—and I'm not in their

FILMING? IT'S ALL FUN

But Hayley at 15 has some problems

HAYLEY MILLS: HOW TO GROW OLD

FOR a world-famous, financially secure 15-year-old, Hayley Mills had a lot on her mind.

First, there was the news that she was replacing Sandra Dee in the Hollywood film of "The Chalk Garden."

"Whoops!" she exclaimed, gold curls jumping about her pretty pug face. "I knew that was floating around, but I didn't know the family"—(that's the formidable five-pronged John Mills family)—"had given their O.K."

"I suppose it's because we'll be in America anyhow—Daddy's going to do 'Ross' on Broadway, you know."

Lastly, there was the ever-nagging problem of how—as the hottest juvenile actress in show business—to grow older without losing face at the box office.

"I should sit down one day up a tree and decide what I'm going to do with myself," she said. "I'd like to do something terribly dramatic for a change and die on the edge of a cliff at the end."

"My Disney contract has another three years to run, but I'd adore to do something in the theatre so long as it could be fun."

It's clear that the younger Miss Mills considers her whole meteoric career to date as fun.

"Now I'm 15 I don't have to fit in lessons between acting any more. But I wouldn't mind having a tutor so I could learn French, Italian, German, and—just in case—Russian. Then I'd be able to film in other languages, wouldn't I?"

"You see," she said, "a boy really needs to be clever at school. I mean, it's sort of all right if girls are twerps, isn't it?"

It was then I decided that the only problem in Hayley Mills's golden future will be how to make time away from work to spend all the money she will surely earn.

Corunna: A VICTORY, YES, BUT HAVE MEN EVER GONE THROUGH AS MUCH TO GET IT?

CORUNNA. By Christopher Hibbert. Batsford. 21s.

WHAT could be more typical of our military traditions than Sir John Moore's victory of Corunna on January 16, 1809?

The victory itself was empty, leading only to successful evacuation by sea. It followed a disastrous retreat that ended in a hopeless campaign.

And the victorious general died dramatically and heroically on the battlefield, thus avoiding that imputation of vulgarity that the British sometimes level against success and successful commanders.

In the summer of 1808 the people of Spain revolted against the French occupation—and Napoleon's giving their throne to his own Bourbon dynasty and aristocracy had tamely given in.

British help was asked for, and a hastily scratched-together expedition under Sir John Moore landed in Portugal.

Encouraged by fantastic Spanish stories of fantastic Spanish victories, Moore and his small army of less than 30,000 marched to the support of the Spanish armies.

In a brilliant strategic move, he led his force round Napoleon's flank towards his vital communications with France. It immediately had the desired result: Napoleon took the heat off the Spaniards and pounced towards Moore.

With 300,000 French troops in Spain and 80,000 within striking distance, Moore began to retreat to his ships at Corunna.

It was Christmas Day, 1808. The route lay through the high Galician mountain passes. No retreat in the history of armies—not even Napoleon's own from Moscow—had been more terrible.

It was bitterly cold, sometimes with driving snow and

THE ENIGMA THAT IS CALLAS

by NOEL GOODWIN
CALLAS: PORTRAIT OF A PRIMA DONNA

MARIA CALLAS'S life and career have made headline news for the past 10 years. She is known to countless thousands who have never set foot inside an opera house.

But Maria Callas, first lady of the world's opera, remains an enigma even to her closest friends.

In the first biography of her, George Jellinek, an American critic and journalist, tries hard to convey something of the woman underneath the glossy, stormy, public image.

Few celebrities offer such temptations to the writer to invent facts where none exist.

The author, though confessedly pro-Callas in his musical sympathies, is generally fair to his subject in all the controversies surrounding her.

BOTH SIDES

Here you can read both sides of the arguments in the story of La Callas's break with her mother, her walkouts on managements on both sides of the Atlantic, her social and professional relationships.

The book carries the story up to her fateful meeting with Greek shipowner Aristotle Onassis, and her separation from the husband who had built her career.

It is a fascinating tale of one woman's determination to succeed better than anybody else in an art that fired her spirit.

With nothing at all in her favour—her childhood was poor, and she herself was ugly, short-sighted and to a large extent unloved—the New York-born daughter of a Greek chemist aimed at the stars and hoisted herself among them.

WORLD'S MOST EXPERIENCED AIRLINE

Incorporated in the State of New York, U.S.A., with limited liability.

SHIP sirens screamed and more than a million voices cheered as the seaplane swooped low over London and flew along the Thames.

Four times the D.H. 50 biplane dived down. Then the pilot shut off the engine close to Westminster Bridge and, at precisely 2.26 p.m., touched down on the water in front of the Houses of Parliament.

At the landing stairs by the Speaker's House, the pilot was welcomed by leading Cabinet Ministers, including the Air Minister, Sir Samuel Hoare, who delivered a telegram of welcome from King George V.

Four days later, the pilot received a knighthood. The date was October 1, 1926—just 35 years ago—and air pioneer Sir Alan Cobham had completed the third and greatest of his historic Empire flights—28,000 miles to Australia and back.

He was the first man to fly from Great Britain to the Antipodes and return by the same route. And not since the Atlantic non-stop in 1919 had a flight by a British airman so captured the public imagination.

Capetown and back

Sir Alan was one of several trail-blazers who lit the headlines regularly in those pioneering days. That year he had already become the first man to make the flight from England to Capetown and back. But it was with this three-month journey, over a distance greater than the circumference of the earth, that he really stirred the whole Empire.

Yet it started quietly enough. Without ceremony, 32-year-old Alan Cobham left the Midway near Rochester at 3 a.m. on June 30, 1926. Without incident, he reached Marville at 11.45 a.m., then Naples in the evening. By July 3, he had arrived on schedule at Athens.

The flight to Australia had already been achieved, but Cobham wanted to demonstrate the commercial possibilities of such a journey by flying there and back with the same machine and engine. He said: "The thing most essential to the future of British Empire trade is the rapid development of air routes within the Empire."

He explained that the return flight was the important part of his enterprise, that this was not to be another death-or-glory flight but an example of how such a journey might be

He flew into the unknown—without navigation or radio First return flight to Australia

ANNIVERSARY STORY

By
GUY JONES

Blinding dust-storm

It happened on July 5, when Cobham, without radio and modern navigational aids, and accompanied only by an engineer, Arthur D. Elliott, was flying through a heavy dust-storm over the Euphrates swamps in Iraq.

They had already had one forced landing. Now they had met a second dust-storm, with visibility steadily worsening. Suddenly, for no apparent reason, there was an explosion in the cabin, severely wounding Elliott in the arm and chest. Cobham reported later: "I instantly suspected that one of our supply rockets, used for the rocket pistols had gone off, or that possibly Elliott had accidentally fired my revolver."

There was only one answer: to fly to Basra, where Elliott could receive hospital care. So Cobham began his 100-mile race against time, skimming low over the swamps and finally touching down on the Tigris at Basra. There, with the aid of natives, he lifted the wounded Elliott into a launch and then rushed him to hospital for an operation.

There had been no pressure on the petrol in the pipe, no earthly reason why it should have burst or wounded Elliott so severely. Yet now the engineer's condition was critical. Why had it happened? Investigation revealed that a hot-tempered Arab shepherd had fired his rifle at the seaplane when it was a bare 50ft. above the Euphrates swamps. The bullet had severed the petrol pipe, then hit Elliott's Cobham resumed his flight on July 13. Battling through the monsoon, he reached Karachi, Delhi, Calcutta, Singapore and Surabaya, Java. At every stop he was welcomed by huge crowds.

Next came the nerve-racking flight to Port Darwin, northern point of Australia—a journey across 500 miles of storm-infested waters, facing a fierce head-wind which made navigation largely guess-work.

For hour after hour they flew on, without sight of land, with the petrol getting lower and lower. They could only wonder whether they were on course. Finally, on August 3, they reached Australia—and they were only five miles off their target of Port Darwin.

At Sydney, over 60,000 people

Swam and reached Surabaya. They planned to cover between 700 and 1,000 miles a day until they reached London.

But the time-table had not allowed for the monsoon. On the next stage they were caught in the fearful storm over the Indian Ocean. They were forced to make a perilous landing on reef-infested waters and take shelter on an uninhabited island.

For days the world lost all trace of Cobham's seaplane. Finally, on September 15, a week after he had left Penang, in the Malay Peninsula, came the news that Cobham had landed safely in Rangoon.

On they flew—to Calcutta (September 19), Athens (29th) and Paris (30th). By now, the British Government had drawn up a massive programme to welcome the conquering hero.

On October 1, crowds cheered Cobham all the way from Hastings as he flew low over the countryside by way of Maidstone to Gravesend, and so up the Thames over Tower Bridge, past the City to Hammersmith and back to Westminster.

The hot-tempered Arab raised his rifle and fired.

His engineer died on the way—shot by a shepherd

"I shut the engine off and yelled to Elliott, asking if there was a fire and he called back 'No,' but that he was hit. I could see his face which was very pale. So I passed pencil and paper through the window from the cockpit to the cabin and opened up the engine again."

Elliott feebly scribbled that the petrol pipe had burst and wounded his arm and body. "Am bleeding a pot of blood..." he wrote.

Critically ill

The heat was almost unbearable and they were flying over desolate, trackless swamps. Cobham could not risk a landing on the water as he might have difficulty in starting the engine single-handed in the terrible heat.

arm and passed through his left lung.

Elliott, 26 and married, died in hospital two days later. Cobham snapped bitterly: "It is a foul and cruel blow, probably done by some irresponsible fool who couldn't do it again if he tried."

It was a chance in a thousand, and now Cobham's faith in the enterprise was shattered. He wanted to call off the ill-omened journey, but then a cable from his wife in England urged him to carry on and he gained fresh heart.

Cobham, under great strain from having both to fly and navigate by himself, now needed another engineer. In England, scores of volunteers came forward, but eventually the breach was filled by an unmarried Service engineer, Sergeant Ward, from the local RAF station.

After Elliott had been buried with full military honours at the British cemetery in Basra, gathered to welcome them; in Melbourne, a crowd of some 150,000 cheered their arrival. Two weeks later, on August 29, Cobham left on the return flight—with an additional crewman, an expert engineer named Capel from the Armstrong-Siddeley Company.

Missing for days

Cobham crossed Australia, from south to north, in three and a half days—easily record time—and by September 5, they had re-crossed the Timor

When they had landed, Sir Samuel Hoare read aloud the King's telegram: "On your safe return from Australia, I offer you a cordial welcome home and congratulate you heartily on the successful termination of yet another historic flight." Four days later, at a luncheon given by the Air Council, Sir Samuel announced that the King had conferred a knighthood on Mr Cobham and that the AFC and OBE had been awarded to Sgt Ward and Mr Capel respectively.

The flight was hailed as "the greatest all-British air project that has yet been attempted."

Mainly for Men by ANGUS MCGILL

IN America, it seems, the London Line is the biggest thing in male fashion since the dear dead drape. They like it in Sweden, too. They like it in Denmark. They think the world of it in Belgium, Holland, France and Switzerland.

Indeed, apart from China, Bechuanaland and parts of Huehuetenango, the one place it is hardly noticed is London. Few Londoners know they have a line. Or, if they do, they can't think, off hand, what on earth it is.

In fact most of us are wearing something approaching the London Line right now. And the London Line for 1962, introduced with a great flourish a few days ago, seemed so ordinary that some of us wondered what the fuss was all about.

The London Line, then, is the long, slender, aristocratic line, especially suited to the Englishman who, as every Huehuetenango knows, is a long, slender aristocrat. Jackets, trousers, overcoats, shoes and ties are all slim and well-bred. Lapels and hat brims are narrow and elegantly shaped. Suits are not slightly waisted. And the 1962 line is the same only more so.

Aristocratic—that's how you can look 'off the peg'

THE LONDON LINE can be double-breasted too—but the slimmest double-breasted ever. Note the tailored shoulders and the slight waistline.

Let other nations pad their shoulders extravagantly, drape their chests, cut short their jackets to display their bellies. The Londoner in his London line keeps the shoulders in was torn with, draws no attention to his chest, wears his jacket a decent length.

Let other nations suggest that their clothes speak of forceful masculinity and virility. The Londoner in his London Line replies that as he has these things abundantly he does not need to speak of them.

And he goes on wearing the quietly understated clothes which are still copied and copied all over the world.

SLOWLY

Compared with women's clothes which change their outline almost as you look, men's clothes change slowly. But not as slowly as all that.

Look at the fashion plates of only 10 years ago. How heavy the shoulders seem. How wide the trousers. How long and tent-like the overcoats.

In fact, for the first time in decades men are now having to buy new suits just because their perfectly sound old ones are out-dated. The fashions who planed it this way, are delighted.

The Masters of Savile Row, of course, don't hold with catch phrases like London Line. In their eyes every suit they make has a London line and quite right too. The outstanding elegance of their clothes is unmistakable.

SLIMNESS

But today you can also find shape and real style in ready-to-wear clothes if you choose carefully.

I have recently been looking at some of the new suits either on sale or soon to be on sale. I was very impressed.

The suits were very individual but they have a line in common, the essential slimmness, the confidently modern feel which is very welcome.

They are light, too. Even winter suits are now being made of much lighter cloth. And they are surprisingly colourful for this is another major change in our ways.

Ten years ago Britain was drearily awash with charcoal grey. Everyone wore the stuff and the mills couldn't turn it out fast enough. Nowadays, thank goodness, cloth is much more interesting.

A whole new world of subtle colour is being woven in and this is something we are going to get more of.

One new process, it is claimed, can put five or six times the amount of colour into cloth.

In these suits even a material that looks plain grey from across the room turns out to have a rich background pattern of bronze or blue.

Blue, indeed, is enjoying a big come-back. It has been dead for years. Now a man in a blue suit can feel smart again. He can still feel smart in turn-ups—but not for much longer. The best of the suits I saw lately were all without them with a great gain in elegance and the impression of height.

Colourful cloth, slender silhouettes and no turn-ups in London next year will mean colourful cloth, slender silhouettes and no turn-ups where-ever an airline will take you.

For whatever the line, if London decrees it the world will follow.

ONE UNDER THE EIGHT

THE Pipkin, which has just been introduced by Friary T. Meux, will be a most welcome guest at bottle parties all over London this winter.

It is a supremely hospitable can containing seven pints of excellent draught bitter ale. It is quite a weight, of course, but party-givers will be delighted to see you with a Pipkin tucked underneath your arm.

Keep the Pipkin cool and the beer will last in peak condition for seven to 10 days. Once opened the beer should be drunk within two or three days. It costs only 11s.

SATURDAY SPORTS SPOT

Let's cosh this CAAF-Korean
caper right now

A keen observer of the local soccer scene can only look and wonder at the apparent lack of co-ordination and co-operation which exist among various 'promoting' organisations in the community.

Towards the end of November the Hongkong Football Association is planning to stage not one but two series of big games against world class international opposition from Yugoslavia and Sweden.

Such a venture is big business. To make ends meet the HKFA will require to coax every available dollar from the net to deep pockets of the soccer fans. For good football entertainment there is usually a healthy market but it needs a little boost to get the competition and attractive tourists from England could do no better than attract a 50 per cent crowd to the stadium. It takes very little to lift a minor series into financial regard, and in many cases the lack of ready cash for tickets is the final deciding factor. A better—or more practical—reason it is hard to find.

Astonishing

With the HKFA's expensive football entertainment in mind it is little short of astonishing to hear that the CAAF has applied for permission to stage a November match of its own against the South Koreans when they pass through on the way home from their inglorious interlude in Israel.

If such a game is finally sanctioned it could very easily have a most unfortunate effect on the Football Association's top-price series of three or four games later in the month.

For which, let it be remembered, the fans will have to find money to buy the pre-sale tickets.

However, there is another, and to my mind more important, aspect to be considered. The Koreans have played here far too frequently already. This time they are really doing no more than picking up a juicy spot of easy money on their return journey. But they are explosive soccer material.

Can't risk

Hongkong football, which is treading on very delicate ground these days, cannot be completely indifferent to the Koreans' reputation. It is true they have generally been reasonably well behaved in the Colony but not so long ago they were in the world headlines after a disgusting show of rank bad sportsmanship in Taiwan and they were back again last week for their part in the bitter brawl in Israel which led to the premature stoppage of the game.

At this moment we simply cannot risk such a happening in Hongkong. We have illustrious visitors booked to play in the Colony. All the plans of the HKFA could go up in a puff of official smoke—and a fully justified puff it would be—for any reason the proposed Korea-Combined Chinese match flared up into trouble.

Don't tell me it will not happen—that the players will be warned about their conduct before the game begins.... that it will be kept under strict control.... that the fans, with the forthcoming big games in mind, will be on their best behaviour. You could very well be right but of course there is also the chance you may be wrong, that is a risk which we simply cannot take particularly as the game and its fancy prices means nothing to anyone. We saw the Koreans play two games at Caroline Hill just a few weeks ago. We have nothing new to learn from them and we have a tremendous amount to lose if their solitary pin-money game goes sour on us.

Colony's first representative
boxing match on Monday

The curtain goes up on the boxing season at the Southern Playground next Monday evening when a Colony representative side crosses gloves with a very colourful and attractive team representing the Combined Malayan Services.

This match—the first of its kind in Colony boxing history—gives the Hongkong Amateur Boxing Association a real crowd-pulling promotion for the start of their 1961-62 programme of events.

With three good Chinese boxers and a selection of the best available pugilists from the Services in Hongkong, to pull in the fans the international match should not lack public support. A really successful night would set an excellent example for the rest of the season. It is a great pleasure to have the visiting Malayan team in our midst. The standard of amateur boxing in Singapore and Malaya improved considerably in the immediate post-war years and, with the incentive and encouragement of very good class professional boxing to set the pattern, the game has not lacked a steady stream of young talent.

Real benefit

It will be interesting to see if the standard has been maintained and if the promise of ten or twelve years ago has been fulfilled.

Hongkong boxing, hampered as it is by a shortage of local exponents and an inevitable sameness about much of what it does, can gain real benefit from an occasion such as this.

The fans can get a chance to hear a genuine 'Hongkong tag' on their representatives and one can only hope the HKABA gets the support it so richly deserves for its enterprise.

If you enjoy night of real honest-to-goodness boxing don't miss this international match. If things go according to plan

Day the Singapore team captain and on right Capt D. O. Carpenter, who won the Queen's Medal at Blesley this year.—China Mail photo.

In the best interests of Colony football the CAAF should abandon the whole idea of staging this game. The fans have a pretty hefty soccer ration on their plates already they do not need another slice of the Korean joint. It would be best for all concerned if the fiery tourists went straight on to cool off at home after their recent incendiary performance in Tel-Aviv.

A YOUNG MAN WITH PROGRESSIVE IDEAS

During the week I received a very interesting letter from a young man with progressive ideas. He puts forward a most original point of view and some organisation may see enough merit in it to help it along a bit further.

I quote, in part, from his letter. "I am no star sportsman. In fact I am a very ordinary performer but I do enjoy 'having a bash' at lots of different activities. Hongkong provides excellent facilities for the non-specialist and in the few years I have been here I have played soccer, rugby, hockey, cricket, golf, tennis; I have taken part in a little water-skiing, swimming and archery. For a time, I got enthusiastic and took a few judo lessons and last year I even got talked into playing a game or two of lawn bowls.

"Although I'm no expert I get a tremendous kick out of just playing something or doing something and if I confess that I find 'double one' almost as elusive as the bag on a snooker table you will know the kind of 'sportsman' I am.

A Sportathlon?

"Nevertheless I am sure there are many many more people just like me. We will never win championships at anything but we would get a lot of enjoyment out of pitting our limited and thinly spread talent against each other.

"Mac, what do you think are the chances of some organisation sponsoring something like a sportathlon for souls like me? It could probably comprise shooting a dozen arrows, firing a frame of snooker, firing a few rounds, cycling ten laps of the Hongkong Stadium, playing a set of tennis, going through some form of potted athletics, maybe even a walk up and down the peak, swim four lengths of the swimming pool, and so on and so on. I think it would be great fun and would attract a worth while entry."

Well, there's an enthusiast I ever I heard from one. I wonder what you think of his idea of a sportathlon. Any enterprising organisation like to go into the promotion business? As the writer says... it could be great fun.

THE HONG KONG AMATEUR BOXING ASSOCIATION

announces:—

A Boxing tournament will be held at the Southern Stadium on 30th October, 1961.

The tournament will be a match between representatives of the H.K.A.B.A. and the Malayan Combined Services. Hong Kong's leading amateur boxers will be taking part. Boxing commences at 8 p.m.

Seat prices are only $10 (Hingdoo) $5 and $1.20.

COME ALONG AND SUPPORT YOUR LOCAL BOXERS.

Singapore,
Malaya
visitors

When the troopship 'Nevada' arrived in Hongkong on Thursday she had on board the Army football team from Singapore and the Small Arms shooting teams from Malaya and Singapore.

The visiting footballers, who come with a good reputation, have a singularly modest programme of games laid on for them but from reports it seems certain that at least one or two of the players will make a hit with local fans.

At 4.30 pm on Monday the boys from Singapore will meet the full League side of the Hongkong Police and this will give them an excellent opportunity to measure themselves against local standards.

FOR CHARITY

The Police side is still struggling to find something like its potential form. However, it has plenty of talent and if it happens to click on this occasion the visitors will be fully tested.

The final match of the short tour sees the Army pooling its Singapore and Hongkong resources and doing combined battle with Happy Valley. If the popular green and whites turn out a full team this could be quite a game and certainly the tourists will enjoy the experience of tackling a side which can boast six or seven Colony representatives.

Both games are being staged in the Police Stadium at Boundary-street. Admission for the first encounter will be 60 cents while those who attend the match against Happy Valley will have to pay $1.20 but as the game is being staged in aid of the SSFA—a most worthy charity—they will no doubt give generously.

The two small arms shooting teams will compete with the Hongkong Army team in the Far East Land Forces Triangular Small Arms Championships and here the main interest will probably be focussed on Capt D. Carpenter, RAOC, who won the Queen's Medal at Blesley this year.

Midsummer Night expected to win today's Cambridgeshire

Newmarket, Oct. 27.
Twenty seven horses were listed as probable starters for tomorrow's nine furlongs Cambridgeshire Handicap with American-owned and bred Midsummer Night II fancied to win the historic event for the second straight year.

Heavy rains today turned the Newmarket turf into a soft, muddy course—similar to the one on which Midsummer Night won the race last year at odds of 40-1.

The four-year-old chestnut colt, bred by the late Lord St. John, was one of the best bred horses at the final British betting collier. He finished at odds of 12-1.

Favourite

Sticky Case, a three-year-old bay, the eye-of-the-race betting favourite at odds of 9-1. The other three-year-olds, Rachel and Plaza, also are well placed in the betting for the race first run in 1839.

Rachel is 10-1 and Plaza 14-1. They are the top weight with 120 pounds. Deton, Henry the Seventh and Indian Cray, also are 14-1. Lesser players, British champion jockey, will be aboard Thomas Trainer.

Only three horses have won the Cambridgeshire two straight years—Sterope (1948-49), Christmas Daisy (1909-10) and Hackett's Pride (1903-04).

The Cambridgeshire, carrying the final Irish Sweepstakes of the season, is a big betting race in which British betters try to couple the winners of the Cesarewitch and the Cambridgeshire in the Autumn Double. It's always a tough one to win. Usually the race turns into an all-out gallop with the final furlong uphill. Starting speed is necessary at the start. Then stamina and guts count in that uphill finish.

Betting odds

Complete betting odds were: 9-1 Sticky Case; 10-1 Rachel; 14-1 Plaza, Thomas Trainer, Deton, Henry the Seventh, Indian Cray; 18-1 Midsummer Night II; 20-1 Blast, Little Redskin; 25-1 King's Messenger, Suppor Mund, Miss Biffin; 33-1 Light Thrust, Blaritz, Salmon King, Smuggler's Joy; 40-1 Violetta III, Water Skier, Guitart; 50-1 Abat Jour, Dais One, Fawdon Lady, Lucky Guy; 66-1 Don't Look, Robson's Choice; 100-1 "encl."

TODAY'S RUGBY

By LANCASTRIAN

At Sek Kong at 3 pm this afternoon the Fourth Regiment RA Rugby XV will be entertaining the First Royal Warwicks. This fixture was originally to have involved the Sek Kong Strangers but it has now been turned over to the Gunners, who I am told have dropped the word 'Field' from their previous title.

Apart from this one game in the New Territories, all today's Rugby will be played on the island.

The Club will be fielding two teams on their own ground. First at 3.15 the Dragons play the RAF, and will find it a hard match if they field the same sort of fifteen that they did last Saturday and if the RAF manage to forget their rather dismal performance against the Warwicks on Wednesday.

Then at 4.30 the Club XV will take on the Police. Police, a fortnight ago, lost narrowly to the Dragons and so must start today's match knowing that they will have to get through a load of work to contain Club, who at present are going great guns. Roberts, one of their leading lights, is due on leave soon, and the Police will be out to do their utmost against formidable opponents before he goes.

The Royal Navy play Whitefield at Causeway Bay at 4.30. What should have been a previous match on this ground, that between 54 Field Sq. RE and Recrolo has had to be cancelled. I should imagine most followers of the game will have heard by now that the Union and the Club between them have something afoot in the way of a tour next month even though there is no mention of it in the Fixture Card.

Tour itinerary

It will not now be long till there is definite news of just who is going just where to play just whom, but I understand that the provisional itinerary is as follows:

At Saigon
Nov. 18: Cercle Sportif (Saigon) vs HKFC.
Nov. 20: Saigon vs Hongkong.
At Bangkok
Nov. 22: Bangkok vs Hongkong.
Nov. 23: Royal Bangkok Sports Club vs HKFC.
Nov. 24: Penang All-Blues vs Hongkong.
If all five matches come off, this must be counted as interesting and ambitious a rugby tour as has ever set out from the Colony.
